OF the various literary and scientific work, which are continually offered to the public, none more frequently require revision and amendment, than geographical compilations. This may be principally attributed, to the instability of things liable to fluctuation, and the perpetual changes, to which nations are subjected: In no part of the world are these effects more observable, than in the United States. The great prosperity and rapidly increasing population of the country, causes a gradual and constant extension of settlement, which, in a few years, changes a wilderness to a state of agriculture, improvement and civilization; thus furnishing new topographical descriptions, or rendering those more perfect that were previously published. The principal merit, therefore, of a work of this kind, consists in accommodating the delineations to the state of geographical improvement, and selecting such articles and facts, as the works of travellers, or other sources of information may afford. To render the present edition worthy of public approbation, the method was adopted, of addressing letters to the various post-towns of the union, but particularly to those of the West and South; the publications of Morse, Spafford, &c. made this measure unnecessary beyond New-York; by this means several hundred articles have been inserted—they are not to be found in any other geographical work. The population of the principal European towns, has been corrected, and in some instances given as late as 1811; those of the United States, when practicable, is inserted to 1814, otherwise the population is taken from the census of 1810. The distances of the post-towns have been given from Washington, according to the list published by the Post-Master-General in 1813. The latitude and longitude, as well as the distances, of all those places, situated on the main post road, between the Eastern extremity of the District of Maine and St. Mary's in Georgia, are taken from an actual survey of that road, made by order of the general government in 1812. The manufacturing establishments of the different towns in the United States are noticed, and the various military transactions of the late war have been mentioned. Care has been taken to curtail useful information, as little as possible, while at the same time, the redundancy of trifling local details, which is too frequently the fault of large Gazetteers, has been avoided. The present publication, it is confidently believed, will not only be found convenient, as to its portable form, and valuable as a book of reference, but also useful and entertaining. Solicitous that this volume should be distinguished, as well by the beauty of its appearance, as by its intrinsic merit, the publisher, to the fineness of the paper, and neatness of typographical execution, has added elegant Maps, which were not promised in the original prospectus.

Information relative to this work, is respectfully solicited. To those gentlemen who furnished the Editor with communications, he returns his sincere acknowledgments, to their politeness he is indebted for the principal part of the new articles, that have been inserted.

ABERDEEN, NEW, a handsome city in Aberdeenshire, for largeness, trade, and beauty, it greatly exceeds any town in the N of Scotland. It is built on a rising ground, and lies on a small bay formed by the Don. On the high street is a large church, which formerly belonged to the Franciscans. In the middle of Castle-street is an octagon building with most beautiful reliefs of the kings of Scotland, from James I. to James VII. The town-house makes a good figure, and has a handsome spire in the centre. Gordon's hospital is handsome, and has in front a good statue of the founder. The infirmary is a large plain building, and sends out between 8 and 600 cured patients annually. But the chief public building in the new town is the Marischal college, founded by earl Marischal in 1695. The principal manufacture is stockings. The thread manufacture is likewise carried to great perfection. A manufactory of sail-cloth and cambricks has lately been established. They have likewise excellent salmon fisheries. The number of inhabitants in Old and New Aberdeen, and the suburbs, including north and south Leith was estimated in 1801 to amount to 82,460. Aberdeen is 84 miles NW of Edinburgh. bout 80 miles from the coast of Brazil, near the island of St. Barth.

ABRUZZO, a province of Naples, bounded on the E by the gulf of Vorine, on the N and W by Anconis, Umbria and Campagna di Roma; and on the S by Terra di Lavoro and Mo-lise. It is divided into two parts by the river Pescara, whereof one is called Ulterior, and has Aquila for its capital; and the other Citerior, of which Sedmona is the capital.

ABSTEINEN, a halvie beyond the river Menel, in the circle of Capria,
belonging to the kingdom of Prussia.
It abounds in corn and cattle.

ABYDOS, a town and castle of Na-tolia, on the strait of Gallipoli. Lon.
27 35 E, lat. 40 16 N.

ABYO, or ABUYO, one of the Philippine islands. Lon. 123 13 E, lat.
10 0 N.

ABYSSINIA, a kingdom of Africa, bounded on the N by Nubia, on the E by the Red Sea and Chancala; on the W by Gortum and part of Gingi-ra; and on the S by Gingia and Alaba; lying between 6 and 30 deg. N lat. and 30 and 40 deg. E lon. It is about 500 miles long, and 300 broad. The rainy season continues from April to September, which is succeeded, without interval, by a cloudless sky, and a ver-dical sun. There is no country in the world that produces a greater variety of quadrupeds, both wild and tame; but there are no tigers. The hyenas, however, are very numerous, and dreadful in their ravages. Besides many species of eagles, vultures, &c. there is a species of hawk, called haddayan, which is very frequent in Egypt, and comes punctually into Abyssinia, at the return of the sun, after the tropical rains; and stocks cover the plains in May, when the rains become constant; there are few owls; but there are of an immense size and beauty.

The most remarkable insect is the Tusital, or fly, which is very fatal to cattle. Even the camel must yield to this insect, for when once attacked, his body, head, and legs, break out into large sores, which swell, break, and putrefy, to the certain destruction of the animal. According to Mr. Bruce, the celebrated river Nile has its source in this country, near the village of Geesh, in lon. 26 45 E, and lat. 10 50 N.

ACAMBOU, a kingdom on the coast of Guinea, in Africa, whose king is absolute, and all a subjects slaves.

ACANNT, an island country of Guinea, affording the best gold, in great plenty. Lon. 0 5 E, lat. 8 30 N.

ACAPULCO, a town of Mexico, seated on a bay of the S Sea. It has a fine harbour, from whence a ship annually sails to Manila; and another returns laden with all the treasures of the E Indies. Lon. 103 30 W, lat. 17 28 N.

ACARIA, a town of South America, in Paraguay. Lon. 51 4 W, lat. 30 0 S.

ACCOMACK COURT-HOUSE, or DRUMMOND'S TOWN, a port village in Accomack county Virginia, 31 miles S of Snow Hill in Maryland, and 218 SE of Washington.

ACERENZA, a town of Naples, in the province of Basilicata. Lon. 15 5 E, lat. 40 28 N.

ACERNO, a town of Italy, in the interior principality of Naples, 13 miles NE of Salerno. Lon. 15 0 E, lat. 40 45 N.

ACH, a town of Sushie, in the land-gravate of Nellenburg; on the river Aoh.

ACHAA, a town of the island of Rhodes.

ACHAM, a country of Asia.

ACHEEN, a kingdom in the NW part of the island of Sumatra. Acheen is comparatively healthy, being more free from woods and swamps, than most other parts of the island. The soil is light and fertile, and produces fruits, rice, cotton, gold dust, and sulphur. The natives are Malaccans. The laws of this kingdom are very severe. For petty theft the offender is suspended from a tree, with a heavy weight tied to his feet; or by cutting off a finger, hand or leg, according to the nature of the offence.

ACHEEN, the capital of a kingdom of the same name, in Sumatra, seated on a river which flows into the sea, near the NW point of the island, about two miles from the mouth; it lies in a wide valley, formed like an amphitheatre by two lofty ranges of hills.

Acheen is 1000 miles SE of Madras. Lon. 95 34 E, lat. 9 23 N.

ACHMIM, a large town of Upper Egypt, on the eastern bank of the Nile. Though this town be fallen from its ancient splendour, it is still one of the most beautiful of Upper Egypt. The streets are wide and clean, and commerce and agriculture flourish.

ACHONRY, a small town of Ireland, in the county of Sligo, on the Shannon.

ACHMETSCHE, a town of Crim Tartary, in the Russian province of Taurida. Lon. 33 20 E, lat. 45 0 N.

AFRICA, one of the four principal parts of the world; bounded on the N by the Mediterranean; on the W by the Atlantic; on the E by the isthmus of Suez, the Red Sea, and the Indian Ocean; and on the S by the Southern Ocean. It is a peninsula of prodigious extent, being joined to Asia by the isthmus of Suez, which is 60 miles over.

In its greatest length, from the most northern part to the Cape of Good Hope, it is 6000 miles; and in the broadest part from Cape Verd to Cape Guardafui, it is 3500. The greatest part of it is within the torrid zone, which renders the heat almost insupportable in many places. However, the coasts in general are very fruitful, the fruits excellent, and the plants extraordinary. There are more wild beasts in Africa, than in any other part of the world; there are also some animals peculiar to this country; as the hippopotamus, or river horse; the rhinoceros, with two horns on its nose; and the beautiful striped zebra. There are several deserts, particularly one of a large extent called Zohara, which is almost without water; but there are not quite without inhabitation. There are many large rivers; but the chief are the Nile, Niger, Senegal and Gambia, the two last having been falsely supposed branches of the Niger. The most considerable mountains are the Atlas, the Mountains of the Moon, and the Sierra Leone, or the mountains of the Lions. The inhabitants consist of Fungas, Makomatsas, and Christians.

ALEXANDRIA, or SCANDERIA
an ancient and once rich and famous town of Egypt, now much decayed though there are still some remains of its ancient splendour. The city was built by Alexander the Great, about 333 years before Christ, and was a league and a half long by one-third its breadth, which made the circumfer-ence of its walls about four leagues.
Lake Mareotis barked its walls on the S, and the Mediterranean on the N.
At present, the city of Alexandria is reckoned to have about 14 or 15,000 inhabitants. It is seated on the most westerly branch of the river Nile, 128 miles NW of Cairo. It was taken by the French in their expedition to Egypt. In 1798 the canal of the Nile, which communicates with the eastern harbour, and is 40 miles long, was cleared out by order of Bonaparte.

AMELIA, an episcopal city of Italy, in the state of the church, 20 miles W of Spoleto, and 45 N of Rome, Lon. 13 30 E, lat. 43 33 N.

AMENIA, a post-township situated in the NE corner of Dundas county, state of New York. It contains 4 Presbyterian meeting houses, and in 1810 its population was 2073. It is 34 miles N of Poughkeepsie and 22 NE of Washington.

AMERICA, one of the four parts of the world, and by much the largest. It is bounded on all sides by the ocean, as appears from the latest discoveries. It took its name from Americus Vesputius, a Florentine, but was first discovered by Christopher Columbus, a Genoese, in 1492. This immense continent is divided into N and S America, which are joined by the isthmus of Darien, or Panama, which is only 60 miles wide. In N America, which reaches from 9 30 N lat. to 70 or 75, or perhaps 80 a parallel still nearer the pole, and from 60 to 170 W lon, are comprehended the divisions of Labrador, Canada, the United States of America, Florida, Mexico, Guatemala, and their subdivisions; and in S America, extending from about 13 N lat. to 60 S lat. and from 30 to 83 W lon, are included those of Venezuela, New Grenada, Peru, Chili, Guiana, Brazil, Paraguay, Patagonia, and the Terra Del Fuego, which is separated from the continent by the straits of Magellan. The chief rivers of N America are the Mississippi, Missouri, Illinois, Ohio, St. Lawrence, Connecticut, Hudson, Delaware, Potomac, Roanoke, Raritan, Savannah, Apalachicola, Mobile, Tennessee, Rio Bravo del Norte and Columbia. Those of S America are the Orinoco, the Amazon or Marañon and the Rio De La Plata, or Parana. The principal mountains of American continent are the Andes, the Stony or Rocky; and the Apalachen or Alleghany. The spots are Hudson, commonly called Hudson's bay; and the Caribbean, The bay of Baffin's bay and the Chesapeake. The gulfs are the gulf of St. Lawrence, of Mexico and California. Its lakes are Winnipeg, Superior, Michigan, Huron, Erie, Ontario, and Niagara. As the continent of America is distinguished from the Old World by the grandeur of its features; so it exhibits a contrast no less remarkable in the wide diversity of its climate and seasons. It extends through the temperate zones, the torrid, and a part of the N frigid zone. The winters of N America are colder and the summers hotter than those of Europe in the same latitudes. But the equatorial parts of the New World are never subjected to the intense heat, that prevails in the same regions in Africa.

AMSTERDAM, an island in the Indian sea. It is resorted to for the purpose of collecting the skins of seals and walrus. This island bears evident marks of recent volcanic eruption; several craters have been observed, and one of very large size full of water, a number of hot springs were also found in different parts of the island. It is upwards of 4 miles in length, and about two miles and a half in breadth. The great crater on the E side forms a harbour, into which the tides flow in a SE by S direction, at the rate of 3 miles an hour, the depth is 8 or 10 fathoms. On every other side the island is inaccessible. E lon. 76 44, S lat. 38 43.

AMSTELREDAM, a large, rich and populous city in Holland, capital of the United Provinces. The walls are high, and well fortified; and the bridge which joins the rampart is built over the river Amstel, and is one of the finest pieces of architecture in these parts. Few cities have their public buildings so fine, numerous, and well kept. The foundation of this town is laid upon piles, driven into a morass, and under the stadthouse alone are 13,000. The streets are spacious and well paved, and most of them have canals, with rows of trees on each side. It is computed to be about half as large as London. It surrendered to the king of France in 1797, when that prince invaded Holland, in favour of the stadtholder, but was evacuated on the restoration of the latter to his rights. Since it surrendered to the French in 1795, its trade has greatly diminished, and its merchants have been impoverished by the repeated exactions of their rapacious conquerors. Its population in 1800 was estimated at 300,000. It is seated at the confluence of the rivers Amstel and Wye, 68 miles N of Antwerp, 172 E by N of London, 840 N by E of Paris, and 300 NW of Vienna. E lon. 4 40 N lat. 52 33.

BALTIMORE COUNTY, in the state of Maryland, is 45 miles long and 30 broad, and is bounded N by Pennsylvania; NE by Harford county; SE by Chesapeake bay; S by Anne Arundel county; and W by Frederick county. The soil with some few exceptions is generally thin. This county contains extensive mines of iron ore, and some of them have been wrought to great advantage. It is famous for its mills and manufactures. It contains a considerable number of grist and saw mills, and within about 15 miles of Baltimore city are upwards of 50 merchant mills; several of which are probably not surpassed by any in the United States. In consequence of the proximity of a number of streams to the vicinity of the city of Baltimore, some large manufactures have lately been established. Within about 10 miles of the town are 5 cotton works, 3 linen, 2 woollen, 2 paper, and 2 gunpowder works. Of these the Union company have a capital of one million of dollars, and one in it, situated on the Patuxent, in operation, with 6000 spindles, and another building of the same size. Powhattan cotton works are on Gwynns falls, capital two hundred thousand dollars, with 2000 spindles in operation. On the same stream, the paper and woollen works of the Franklin company are situated, capital one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. On Jones' falls are the cotton works of the Washington company, with a capital of one hundred thousand dollars, and 2000 spindles in operation, and also the Belona gunpowder works, which manufactures 60 quarter casks per day, capital one hundred thousand dollars. The principal fabrics of the cotton works consist of velvets, ginghams, shirtings, chambrays, &c. Part of the weaving is accomplished in Baltimore city, by private individuals. The Union company have about 60 looms in operation.

BALTIMORE, the largest town, and capital of the above county, in the state of Maryland, and one of the most commercial ports in the union; is situated on the N side of the Patuxent river, about 14 miles from its junction with the Chesapeake. The basin around which the town is built affords on all sides one of the most secure and commercial harbours in America. It was settled in 1743, and in 30 years after contained but 40 houses. In 1790 its inhabitants amounted to 13,500; and in 1810 its population was 46,555 of whom 10,343 were blacks. A small creek, called Jones' falls, runs through the city, and divides it into two unequal parts; six bridges are built over this stream, and three of them are constructed of stone, with handsome arches and iron railings. The eastern division is subdivided, or designated by the names of Old Town and Fells Point, at the latter ships of the largest burden discharge their cargoes, but those of 200 tons have a sufficient depth of water to the head of the basin. The surrounding country rises by gentle acclivity, affording eligible situations for summer retreats. The more wealthy citizens have availed themselves of these advantages, and to the northward and westward many beautiful country seats are to be seen, exhibiting specimens of taste and elegance. The streets are well paved and many of them spacious. The public buildings are numerous, and some of them are superb structures, particularly the new court house, situated on the NW corner of Washington square; the medical college at the W end of the city, on the corner of Lombard and Green streets, not only displays beautiful architecture, but is superior to any thing of the kind in the U. States; the Union bank in N. Charles street, deserves particular notice for its appropriate beauty. The other public buildings are the Mechanics bank, situated on the SE corner of Washington square; the Commercial and Farmers Bank, on the corner of S Howard and German streets, both handsome buildings; the Assembly room, on the corner of Holiday and East streets, containing the city library; The new theatre; a penitentiary, jail, and hospital, situated in the eastern precincts; and an almshouse in the western precincts. Of the houses for public worship, 8 are for roman catholics, 4 for methodists, 4 for episcopalians, 3 for presbyterians, 2 for friends, 2 for seceders, 2 for baptists, 2 German reformed, 1 for German Lutherans, 1 for dunkards, 1 New Jerusalem, and 3 for Africans. Several of these are elegant buildings, and St. Mary's chapel, situated on the Fredericktown road, is a neat specimen of gothic architecture. The principal seminaries of learning are the university of Maryland; St. Mary's college, which has a botanical garden; and the Baltimore college. The first of these is yet in its infancy. It received its charter in 1815, and was incorporated on the 17th of February and Chirurgical Faculty or Society of Maryland.

which was incorporated in 1795. The University consists of a provost and four faculties, viz. of medicine, of divinity, of law, and of the arts and sciences. Each faculty is composed of seven professors, one of whom is elected dean of the faculty. The professors are likewise styled in their corporate capacity, "Regents of the University of Maryland." The medical department of this institution, only, is in operation. Its professorships are filled by gentlemen of distinguished talents, and great professional eminence; their names are as follows: Anatomy by John B. Davidge, M. D.; the theory and practice of medicine by Nathaniel Potter, M. D.; chemistry by Eliza De Brutta, M. D.; materia medica by Samuel Baker, M. D.; the theory and practice of surgery by William Gibson, M. D.; midwifery by Richard W. Hall, M. D.; and the institutes of medicine by Maxwell M. Dowd, M. D. There is also several excellent male and female academies; 3 free schools on the Lancasterian plan, and a considerable number of common schools. The Baltimore Library company was incorporated on the 20th January 1790. The number of volumes at present are about 9000, well selected, and funds are accumulated sufficient to purchase 1000 additional volumes. By the exertions of Mr. Rembrand Peale, the foundation of an excellent institution of natural history and the fine arts has been established; his museum, which is situated in Holiday street, near the theatre, in a building erected expressly for the purpose, already contains a fine collection, and a gallery of beautiful paintings. This city contains 9 banks; several insurance companies; a large cotton factory in Old Town, and a variety of other manufactures in different parts of the city. A glass house is established, and a number of casting furnaces. Baltimore is supplied with water from Jones's falls, by means of a canal, the water is raised by machinery and conveyed to two large reservoirs, one near the water works in N. Calvert street, and the other situated on Franklin street; from these it is distributed to every part of the city, except Fells point, which is furnished with excellent spring water, that is also conveyed through aqueducts. Besides these advantages, the city is supplied with a never failing spring of excellent water, situated on N. Calvert street, in a lot purchased by the corporation and handsomely improved. Baltimore is the third city in population, and the fourth in commercial importance in the Union. The harbour is narrow & well defined by Fort M. Henry, which completely secures it against a naval force. On the point of land on the SW side of the city several heavy batteries are planted one mile and a half from the main fort, these batteries command the cove opposite the harbour. On the E side of the town, strong encroachments are thrown up, flanked by redoubts, and secured by a deep ditch in front. This city was attacked by the British on the 11th and 12th of September 1814, from which they were compelled to retire with disgrace. the Savannah and Tugolo rivers which separate it from Georgia. It is divided into 23 districts, and was first settled in 1670; in 1810 it contained 214,201 white inhabitants, 190,305 slaves, and 4,884 free blacks. The climate of this state varies according to season; as you approach the western boundary it is cooler; in the winter the mountains in this part of the state are often covered with snow. From thence to the sea it but seldom falls so as to cover the ground. The orange trees are sometimes destroyed by frost. The low country which extends about 80 miles from the falls of the rivers to the sea shore, is almost a entire level, and destitute of stones. This tract produces extensive forests of pitch pines, called pine barrens; it is interspersed, likewise, with large swamps and marshes. At some distance from Charleston in a WNW course, commences a curiously uneven and barren country, of little sandy hills, which continues to a high belt of land, called the "Ridge," of excellent soil. This ridge extends from Savannah to Broad river. Beyond it the upper country begins; here the air is more temperate and healthy than nearer the sea. The hills are covered with valuable timber; the valleys well watered, and the lands extremely fertile. The high hills of Santee between 30 and 60 miles from the ocean, are between 3 and 5 miles wide, and rank among the most opulent parts of the state. The agricultural products are cotton, rice, indigo; and in the upper country, hemp, flax, wheat, &c. The culture of grapes, figs and olives, have been attempted. Its rivers are the Waccamaw, Pedee, Black river, Wateree, Wando, Cooper, Ashley, Stono, Edisto, Asheppee, Combahee, Coosaw, Broad, and Santee which last is formed by the Congaree and Wateree.

CARNESVILLE, the county town of Franklin county, in the state of Georgia, about 60 miles NW of Columbia, in the same state, and 61 from Washington.

CARNIOLA, a province of Germany, in the circle of Austria; bounded on the N by Carinthia and Stiria, on the E by Moravia and Croatia, on the S by Moravia and Istria, and on the W by Friuli.

CAROLINA, NORTH, one of the United States of America; bounded on the N by Virginia, on the E and SE by the Atlantic; on the S and SW by S Carolina and Georgia; and on the NW by Tennessee. It is situated between N lat. 33 30, and 36 30, and W lon. 74 45, and 83 50. It is 430 miles long, its greatest breadth 180. This state is divided into 63 counties; and was first settled in 1660. The inhabitants of the low lands adjacent to the sea coast, are subject to a variety of diseases, particularly fevers. The western and hilly parts of the state are healthy. The lands of the flat country, which extends about 80 miles from the sea, are poor and unproductive. In the western parts of the state the various kinds of grain hemp, and cotton are produced in great perfection. Its principal rivers are the Roanoke which rises in Virginia, Cape Fear, Neuse, Pamlico, and Chowan; branches of the Kennebec and Tennessee, rise in this state. Population, in 1810, 370,410 whites, 156,234 slaves, and 10,266 free blacks.

CAROLINA, SOUTH, one of the United States of America, lying between 33 and 35 N lat., and 79 34 and 83 30 W lon. Bounded on the N and NE by N Carolina, on the SE by the Atlantic, and on the SW and W by the Savannah and Tugalo rivers which separate it from Georgia. It is divided into 23 districts, and was first settled in 1670; in 1810 it contained 214,301 white inhabitants, 196,395 slaves, and 4,554 free blacks. The climate of this state varies according to situation, near the sea the summer is excessively hot; as you approach the western boundary it is cooler; in the winter the mountains in this part of the state are often covered with snow. From thence to the sea it but seldom falls so as to cover the ground. The orange trees are sometimes destroyed by frost. The low country which extends about 80 miles from the falls of the rivers to the sea shore, is almost an entire level, and destitute of stones. This tract produces extensive forests of pitch pines, called pine barrens; it is interspersed, likewise, with large swamps and marshes. At some distance from Charleston in a WNW course, commences a curiously uneven and barren country, of little sandy hills, which continues to a high belt of land, called the "Ridge," of excellent soil. This ridge extends from Savannah to Broad river. Beyond it the upper country begins; here the air is more temperate and healthy than nearer the sea. The hills are covered with valuable timber; the valleys well watered, and the lands extremely fertile. The high hills of Santee between 30 and 60 miles from the ocean, are between 3 and 5 miles wide, and rank among the most fertile parts of the state. The agricultural products are cotton, rice, indigo; and in the upper country, hemp, flax, wheat, &c. The culture of grapes, figs, and olives, have been attempted. Six rivers are the Waccamaw, Pedee, Black river, Wateree, Wando, Cooper, Ashley, Stono, Edisto, Ashepoo, Combahee, Coosaw, Broad, and Santee which last is formed by the Congaree and Wateree.

CHINA, an extensive empire in Asia, bounded on the N by Tartary, from which it is separated by a great wall 500 leagues in length; on the E by the Yellow Sea, and the Chinese Ocean; on the S by the ocean and the kingdoms of Tonquin, Laos, and Burmah; and on the W by Thibet. It lies between 100 and 125 deg. E lon. and 30 and 41 deg. N lat. It is 3500 miles from N to S, and 1500 from E to W, and divided into 15 provinces, which contain 4403 walled cities, divided into classes, the civil and military; the civil class contains 3048, and that of the military 3357. It is in general a plain and level country, with few mountains of any note, but the rivers are very numerous and considerable. The inland navigation is besides assisted by numbers of canals. These are formed in a manner superior to that of other nations; the principal being fixed with hewn stone, so deep that they are able to carry vessels of any burden, and extending in some places 1000 miles in length. They are furnished with stone quays, and sometimes with bridges of a surprising construction. According to the calculations of Father Amiot, China contains 300,000,000 inhabitants. The climate and soil are various, as the different provinces are nearer to, or remote from the S; severe cold being felt at Pekin, while the southern provinces are exposed to excessive heat. China has been often deluged by its rivers. Its numerous mountains (which are chiefly in the N and W parts of the empire) contain mines of iron, tin, copper, quicksilver, gold, and silver. Quarries of marble, coal mines, lapis lazuli, rock crystals, precious stones, and a kind of sonorous stone, of which musical instruments are composed, are abundant in China. They have pottery's earth of such various and superior kinds, that their celebrated fine porcelain will ever remain unrivalled. The mountains and vast forests abound with wild animals of every species; but the valuable quadruped, the musk-deer, is peculiar to it. Of their birds, the most beautiful in China, and perhaps in the world, is the kin-hi, or golden fowl. The principal defence of the empire against a foreign enemy is the great

The climate and soil are various, as the different provinces are nearer to, or remote from the S; severe cold being felt at Pekin, while the southern provinces are exposed to excessive heat. China has been often depopulated by famine. Its numerous mountains (which are chiefly in the N and W parts of the empire) contain mines of iron, tin, copper, quicksilver, gold, and silver. Quarries of marble, coal mines, lapis lazuli, rock crystals, precious stones, and a kind of sonorous stones, of which musical instruments are composed, are abundant in China. They have pottery's earth of such various and superior kinds, that their celebrated fine porcelain will ever remain unrivalled. The mountains and vast forests abound with wild animals of every species; but the valuable quadruped, the musk-deer, is peculiar to it. Of their birds, the most beautiful in China, and perhaps in the world, is the kin-hi, or golden fowl. The principal defence of the empire against a foreign enemy is the great wall, which separates China from Tartary, extending more than 1800 miles in length, and of such thickness that six horsemen may easily ride abreast upon it. It is flanked with towers two bowshots distant from each other.

COLUMBIA, a large river of North America. Its geography is but imperfectly known. At the distance of 413 miles from the Pacific Ocean it receives Lewis's river, from the east, which is 578 yards wide, and the Columbia 960. At the distance of 154 miles from the latter, Lewis's river is joined by the Kootenoke, and about 100 miles further it divides into two branches called the N and S forks, both which rise in the rocky mountains not far from the head waters of the Missouri. The Kootenoke, or Flat-Head, also, rises by two branches in the same mountains, which unite in N lat. 46 56 55 3. At their junction the main stream is 12 yards wide, and after running an easterly course of 73 miles, in which there are a number of shoals, it falls into Lewis's river, and widens at its junction to 150 yards; it is a rapid stream, and its waters clear as crystal. Lewis's river is here 200 yards wide, but its water is of a greenish blue colour; it pursues a NW course for a few miles, then turns W and after making 74 miles, receives Drew's river from the NE, 30 yards wide; after running 76 miles further in a course a little S of W it joins the Columbia in lat. 46 15 13 20. In this last distance there are three bad rapids.

The Columbia soon widens from one to three miles including islands, and pursues a course SW for 154 miles, and receives from the S the river Towarabooks, 800 yards wide, four miles further are the great falls in lat. 46 48 57 3; the first fall is 30 feet perpendicular below this a long rocky island compresses the channel of the river within the space of 150 yards, so as to form nearly a semicircle; beyond this the channel is somewhat wider, but is still divided from the main stream by a second and much larger black rock, while on the left side it is closely bordered by perpendicular rocks. At the distance of about one mile from the first fall the river is obstructed by a swift rapid of 8 feet descent, which ends the first pitch of the great falls, and is remarkable only for the singular manner in which the rocks have divided the river. About 300 yards from the rapid is the second fall 37 feet 8 inches in pitch. At the distance of two and a half miles from this fall, the river widens into a large bend or basin on the right; at the extremity of which stands a high rock, that stretches across the river to meet the high hills on the opposite shore, leaving a space of only 45 yards wide, through which the whole waters of the Columbia must pass their way. The water being thus forced into a narrow channel, rises at the falls above, and is here thrown into boil with the wildest agitation. Thirty miles from the great falls, is Cataract river which comes from the N, and is 60 yards wide; forty-one miles further is the grand rapid in lat. 45 44 3; through a part of the last 71 miles the Columbia pursues a NW course, and at the grand rapid is narrowed to 150 yards, it is here crowded with rocks and islands for 400 yards, the descent about 20 feet; at the distance of one mile and a half the river is again obstructed by another very bad rapid.

The Columbia now turns nearly W and after running 23 miles meets tide water in lat. 45 48 45, and continuing its course a little S of W for 33 miles it is joined by the Multnomah, 140 miles from the ocean; its junction is at the upper end of an island called Waypatoo, 20 miles long and from 4 to 10 broad; this island is remarkable for the common arrowhead, which grows upon it in great abundance, called by the natives Wappetoo, the root of which they gather for food. The Multnomah 7 miles from its confluence is 800 yards wide, and more than 5 fathoms deep; it appears to flow from the SE and its current is regular and gentle. The Columbia now pursues a NW course until it joins the Pacific ocean in lat. 46 40 forty-four miles from the Multnomah it receives the Cowelliskie river 150 yards wide, it falls in behind a long and narrow island, on which, below the mouth of the river a very remarkable and singular nob rises from the water's edge to the height of 80 feet, measuring 200 paces round the base; the Cowichie discharges itself on the N side of the Columbia. It is deep, wide, and navigable for a considerable distance. From a little above Cataract river to the rapids the Columbia is from one half to three quarters of a mile wide and has scarcely any current; during the whole of this course the trunks of many large pine trees are found standing erect in the water, and are often 30 feet long. Little is known of the Columbia beyond Lewis river. A considerable distance from this stream it is joined by another, still larger, called Clark's river, which forks on the mountains; where the E branch is 100 yards wide, and the main fork 150 which waters an extensive level plain. A few miles above the junction the E branch receives the Cookashishik, that comes from the NE and rises near Dearborn's river, a branch of the Missouri. The Cookashishik is deep, rapid and 60 yards wide and the E branch 90, but below the junction the latter widens to 180. The distance from the Mississippi to the falls of the Missouri is 375 miles; thence 340 miles through the plains, and across the Rocky mountains to the navigable waters of the Kookoskoo, 200 miles of which is a good road, 144 is over a tremendous mountain, steep and broken, 60 miles of which is covered with snow several feet deep in June. From the navigable point of the Kookoskoo, the distance descending the Columbia to the Pacific ocean is 640 miles, about 180 of which is tide water. Making the whole distance from the Mississippi to the Pacific 3445 miles.

COLUMBIA, a district of the United States, and the seat of the general government. It is a square with a side of 10 miles and lies on both sides of the Potomac, about 120 miles from its mouth. This district was ceded by the states of Maryland and Virginia to the U States in 1790, and was made the permanent seat of the Federal government in 1800. It is divided into the county of Washington on the E side of the Potomac; and the county of Alexandria, on the W side. In 1810 its inhabitants amounted to 24,023, of whom 2640 were free blacks, and 5393 slaves. The rivers of this district are the Potomac which intersects it, and is navigable for large ships close to the bank half a mile above Greenleaf's point. The Eastern Branch rises in Maryland, and flows about 30 miles. It is navigable for the largest ships 4 miles along its bank. Rock creek runs southerly about 10 miles. This state is bounded S and W by Maryland; N by Pennsylvania, E by the river and bay of Delaware, and the Atlantic ocean. It was first settled by a colony of Swedes and Finns, in 1637, who were reduced by the Dutch in 1655; and the latter in a few years after became subject to the English. In 1810, the inhabitants amount to 125,774; of whom 13,136 were free blacks, and 4,177 slaves. The climate in many parts is unhealthy, in consequence of the lands being low and flat, which occasions the waters to stagnate, and subjects the inhabitants to the diseases arising from marsh miasma. A ridge or height of land which extends between the bays is in this state. It commences near the Cyprus Swamp, and runs nearly parallel with the indentures of the W coast of Delaware bay. Many parts of Delaware are well adapted to agriculture, and wheat, which is the staple, is cultivated to great perfection. Its manufactures are in a flourishing state and some of them extensive. The principal streams of water are Brandywine and Indian rivers; Christiana, Duck, Motherkill, Mispillon, and Broadkill creeks. Several rivers that fall into Chesapeake bay rise in this state.

EDINBURGH, the metropolis of Scotland, situated in a county of the same name. It may properly be divided into the Old and New Towns, the Old Town is situated on a narrow steep hill, about a mile in length, terminated abruptly on the W side by the castle, from which there is a gradual declivity to the palace of Holyroodhouse. The castle is seated on a vast perpendicular rock, accessible only by a draw-bridge on one side, and in ancient times was considered as almost impregnable. The church of St. Giles, on the highest street, is very ancient. It is a fine Gothic structure, and is at present divided into four churches. Near to this stands the Parliament-house, now occupied by the courts of session and exchequer. In the square adjoining is a handsome equestrian statue of Charles II. The Royal Exchange, on the opposite side of the street, is an extensive building, founded in 1753; but not occupied as an Exchange. The Town-Church, founded in 1637, has been lately modernized, and has a neat appearance. The palace of Holyroodhouse forms a grand quadrangle, with a court in the centre surrounded by piazzas; the NW towers were built by James V, and the whole was completed in the reign of Charles II. Adjoining are the magnificent ruins of an abbey founded by David I, in 1138. The New Town is situated on the N side of the Old, on an elevated plain, from which the ground descends to the S and N with a gentle declivity. It forms an assemblage of very elegant and uniform streets and squares. The public buildings are the Register Office, a vast pile of modern architecture, uniting elegance and stability; St. Andrew's Church, the Physician's Hall; the Excise Office; and the New Assembly Rooms. The communication between the N and S parts of the city is facilitated by two noble bridges. There are a number of public buildings in Edinburgh, besides those mentioned, viz. Heriot's hospital, founded in 1632, an elegant Gothic pile; the Royal Infirmary; Watson's, Merchants, Trades, Trinity, and Orphan hospital; Public dispensary, Merchant's Hall, &c. The places of public amusement are the Theatre Royal, Concert Hall, Assembly Rooms, and Equestrian Circus. On the summit of the Caltonhill, has lately been erected a Bridewell. In 1801, the population, including the suburbs, and the environs of N and S Leith, amounted to 82,500. It is 3 miles S of Leith, 34 WNW of Berwick upon Tweed, and 2 1/2 N by W of London. The broadest part is from Alexandria to Damietta, and thence it gradually grows narrower, till it approaches Nubia. It is divided into the Upper, Middle, and Lower; which last comprehends the Delta; and though the air is naturally hot, and not very wholesome, it enjoys so many other advantages, that it has been always extremely populous. The 8 winds are by the natives called poisonous winds, or the hot winds of the deserts. During the three days that they generally last, the streets are deserted, and woe to the traveller whose three winds surprise remove from shelter. The pyramids of Egypt are noticed by all travellers; the largest takes up ten acres of ground, and is, as well as the rest, built upon a rock. Here are also caverns, out of which they get the mummies, or embalmed bodies; which are found in coffins, set upright in niches of the walls, and have continued there at least 6000 years.

ERIE LAKE, in N America, is situated between 41 20, and 43 10, N lat. and between 78 40, and 83 10, W lon. It is about 350 miles long. Its greatest breadth about 60, and its least 10. The northern shore affords few good harbours. From its point of land projects several miles into the lake, and extends towards the S E called Long Point, about 40 miles E of this.

A Grand river, the principal stream that falls in from the Canada side. On the S E shore nearly opposite to Long point, is another small projection, called Freque Isle; here is a good harbour. Several of its tributary streams from the state of Ohio afford tolerable good anchorages for vessels, but are occasionally subjected to much injury from the shifting of the sands, at their outlets; so much so that at times they are rendered entirely useless. Rocky river, which affords one of the best harbours, is 9 miles W of Cayahoga river, its bottom is rocky and the depth of water at its mouth 8 feet. Black river discharges itself 18 miles W of the former, and 20 W of the former.

Its mouth affords a good harbour for vessels of 8 or 10 feet draught. Sandusky bay is 30 miles W of Black river, affording a good harbour for vessels drawing 10 feet water. The spacious bay of Miami, is 20 miles from the last, and situated at the W end of the Lake, it forms a large and safe harbour, vessels can anchor, 24 miles, to the foot of the rapids, and within 3 miles of Fort Meigs. The Bass Islands are situated in the W end of the lake, about 10 miles NW of Sandusky bay. One of these islands is known by the name of Edwards, or Put in bay, from the harbour that it prevents, and which is the best in Lake Erie; being sufficiently large for 100 vessels to ride in safety. This island contains a spacious cove that has in it a spring of excellent water. From Put in bay the eye can discover the Canada shore, and the island of Point aux Plats, the only one in the lake possessed by the British. To the N of Bass Islands are 3 others, that are denominated the Three Sisters, the middle one of which, is distant from Edwards Island 48 miles on a course 30 degrees W of N. 45 the W end it receives Detroit river, which affords a navigable communication with the great lakes on the N and NW; and at its bend a communication, with Ontario by means of Niagara river. This lake is rendered memorable, by one of the most brilliant naval victories on record, fought on the 10th of Sept. 1813. In this engagement the whole of the British ships, surrendered to the American squadron under the command of Commodore Perry.

FRIBURG, one of the cantons of Switzerland, surrounded on all sides by the canton of Bern. It is fertile in corn, fruits and pastures.

FRIBURG, a town of Switzerland, capital of a canton of the same name. The public buildings, especially the cathedral, are handsome. Its situation is very extraordinary, for only the W side is near plain ground, and the rest is built upon rocks and precipices, several parts of which are accessible only by stairs and ladders. Three miles from this town is a celebrated hermitage, cut in a rock, which contains a church and a steeple, a vestry, a kitchen, a large hall, two rooms on each side, two pairs of stairs, and a cellar. But the most wonderful thing of all is the steeple, which is 70 feet high above the rock; and the chimney of the kitchen is 90 feet in height. It is almost inconceivable how one man, with his servant, could perform so difficult a work, though they were 56 years about it. Friburg is seated on the river Saane, 18 miles SW of Bern. HINDOOSTAN, or INDIA, a celebrated country of Asia, which in its most extensive signification, comprehends the tract situated between the Thibetian and Tartarian mountains on the N, the Indian Ocean on the S, the Burrampootee and the bay of Bengal on the E, and the Indian Ocean and Persia on the W. But this country must be considered under the three grand divisions of Hindoostan Proper, the Deccan, and the Peninsula. Hindoostan Proper includes all the countries on the N of the river Nerbuddah, which bounds it on the S as far as it goes; Bengal and Bahar compose the remainder of its southern boundary. It is divided into eleven soubahs, the names of which are Lahore, Aroolana (including Sinder), Agimere, Delhi, Agra, Oude, Allakabad, Bahar, Bengal, Malwa, and Guzerat. A 13th soubah, named Cubul, was formed out of the countries contiguous to the W sources of the Indus, and three new ones out of the conquests of the Deccan; Berar, Candiate, and Amednagur. The tract S of these, or the river Kistna, is generally called the Peninsula; although its form does by no means warrant it. The whole of Hindoostan in 1793, consisted of six principal states, which hold as tributaries, or feudatories, some inferior states. These six principal states were, the British; the Poonah Maharatta; the Berar Maharatta; Nizam Ally, soubah of the Deccan; Mysore, or the dominions of Tippe Sultan and the Seika. The British possessions are Bengal, Bahar, Benares, the Northern Circars, the Jaghire in the Carnatic, Bombay, Salcutte, the district of Midnapour in Orissa, and some considerable cession from Tippe Sultan in 1792. Since 1792, war broke out with Tippe, who was defeated, and his capital taken by assault, together with an immense quantity of plunder; Tippe lost his life in the attack. By

India, a great extent of territory has secured to the British, and their power is now secured on a permanent foundation. The allies of the British who may be considered as dependents upon them, are the nabobs of Oude, the Carnatic and the rajahs of Travancore and Cochin. For the five other principal states, see their respective names; and for an account of some inferior independent states, see Bundela, Balaghat, the Jats, Rohilkhand &c. According to Mr. Orme, the inhabitants of Hindoostan are computed at 10,000,000 Mahomedans, and 100,000,000 Hindus. Hindoostan, toward the N is pretty temperate; but hot toward the S, and it rains almost constantly for three months in the year. Its products, and various other particulars, will be found under the different names of its provinces, cities, towns, mountains, and rivers, described in the course of this work. See INDIA.

LAPLAND, the most northerly country of Europe, extending from the N Cape in 71 deg. 30 min. N lat. to the White Sea under the arctic circle. It is inhabited by the same people, though the country is subject to different powers. Swedish Lapland, under dominion of Denmark, lies between the northern sea, the river Pania, and the lake Enonteki. Swedish Lapland comprehends all the country from the Baltic to the mountains that separate Norway from Sweden. Lapland may be termed a huge congeries of fruitful rocks and stupendous mountains; interspersed, however, with many pleasant valleys, watered by an infinite number of rivulets that run into the rivers and lakes, which discharge themselves into the gulf of Bothnia. The names of the principal lakes in Lapland are the Great Uma, the Great Windel, the Oranvan, the Stor-avan, the Great Lulea, the lakes of Karom, Ull, Toron, Esara, and Kims. Some of these extend 60 leagues in length, and contain a great number of islands: Stor-avan is said to contain 365; and Esara contains an archipelago of islands so large, that no Laplander has lived long enough to visit each particular island. The cold in this country is very intense during the winter, freezing even brandy and the watery part of spirit of wine; if the latter is not highly rectified: all the lakes and rivers are frozen to a prodigious thickness; and the whole face of the country is always covered with snow. At the northern extremity of the country the sun never sets for three months in summer; and in winter there is an uninterrupted night of the same duration: but this is qualified in such a manner by a constant revolution of dawn and twilight, by a serene sky, moonlight, and aurora borealis, reflected from the white surface of the earth covered with snow, that the inhabitants are enabled to hunt, fish, and proceed with their ordinary occupations.

It consists of the City, properly so called, the city of Westminster, and the borough of Southwark, besides the suburbs in Middlesex, and Surrey. London and Westminster are in Middlesex, on the N side of the river

LON

Thames; and Southwark is on the opposite bank, in Surrey. The city is divided into 30 wards, each governed by an alderman; and from the aldermen, the lord mayor is annually chosen. Its public buildings are numerous. The cathedral of St. Paul, is the most conspicuous, and inferior to none in Europe, except St. Peter's of Rome. Westminster Abbey, the seat of the church of St. Peter, is a noble specimen of Gothic architecture. There is a great number of churches, and most of the English sovereigns have been crowned, and many of them interred. It contains also a great number of monuments of kings, statesmen, heroes, poets, and persons distinguished by genius, learning, and science. The royal town residence is a house at the W side of St. James's Park, built by the duke of Buckingham, and purchased by the king in 1701, when it received the appellation of the Queen's Palace, but is still frequently called Buckingham House. Carlton House, the residence of the prince of Wales, is a stately building. The Banqueting House at Whitehall, begun in 1619, is only a small part of the vast plan of a palace. Westminster hall is a large building, adjoining to which is the house of the lords and commons. There is also the Guildhall, the Session-house of the Old Bailey, the Tower an ancient fortress, once a royal palace now containing some public offices, a magazine, and arsenal, the regalia of the kingdom, the mint, and a menagerie of the lions, the elephants, the camels, and the Almirante's Whitehall; the noble collection of public offices which form that magnificent structure called Somerset Palace; the Royal Exchange; in Cornhill; the Bank of England; the Customhouse; the India House; the East India House; the Bank of England; the Mansion House for the lord mayor; the Monument, in commemoration of the great fire in 1666; the ancient bridge, called London bridge; and the two magnificent modern bridges of Blackfriars and Westminster. The British Museum in Great Russell street, Bloomsbury; and the Leverian Museum, in Great Street, are, perhaps, the noblest of their kind in Europe. The Inns of Court for the study of the law, the colleges, learned societies, and public assemblies; the halls of the different trading companies; the noble hospitals and other charitable institutions; the prisons, the public places of diversion; with its fine squares and streets, which are built with great regularity, are all too numerous to be particularly mentioned. London is the centre of trade, has an intimate connection with all the countries in the kingdom, and is the grand mart of the nation. It is situated on the Thames, about 30 miles distant from the sea, it enjoys, by means of this beautiful river, all the benefits of navigation, without the danger of being surprised by foreign fleets, or of being annoyed by the most vapours of the sea. It rises regularly from the river-side, and extending itself on both sides along its banks, reaches a prodigious length from E to W, in a kind of amphitheatre towards the N, and is continued for near 30 miles on all sides, in a succession of magnificent villas and populous villages, the country seats of gentlemen and tradesmen; its length from E to W is generally allowed to be above 7 miles, and the circumference of the whole is almost 18. London is the seat of many considerable manufactures; some almost peculiar to itself, others in which it participates with the manufacturing towns in general. London contains upwards of 300 places of public worship, and its population in 1811, including Westminster city, and the different divisions and suburbs, amounted to 1,099,106. MIAMI, the name of three rivers in the state of Ohio. The first is called Great Miami, it rises in the northern part of the state, and passing the Indian boundary in a southern direction, flows through the richest, and most flourishing part of the state. It falls into the Ohio at Lawrenceburg, in Indiana territory, 15 miles below Cincinnati. This river is navigable for 125 miles, and is 200 yards wide at its mouth. Mad river, a branch of the Miami, also, is navigable for a considerable distance. Little Miami is a much smaller stream, but passes through a fertile country, in a direction nearly S. It falls into the Ohio at the town of Columbus. The third river is called Maumee or Miami of the Lake, it is formed by the junction of the rivers St. Joseph and the St. Mary's, the former is small and rises in the Indiana territory; the latter is much larger and is formed by the union of three small streams at port St. Mary's, it then passes through a fine tract of country, and after making the distance of 55 miles, joins the St. Joseph at fort Wayne; the united streams under the name of Miami, taking a NE course winds through a rich, level tract of country to fort Winchester, where it receives the Au-Glaize. At the distance of 40 miles from fort Winchester it is precipitated over a descent which forms the rapids; and about 2 miles farther is fort Meigs, situated on the right bank of the river, below which it embraces an island containing about 500 acres, and falls into a bay of the same name, opposite to the old British fort Miami, situated on the left bank of the river, about 18 miles from lake Erie. Its general course is NE, and its width 150 yards.

MINDORA, one of the Philippine Islands, 50 miles in circumference, separated from Luzon by a narrow channel.

MINGRELLA, a province of Asia, which makes part of Georgia; bounded on the W by the Black Sea, on the E by Imeritia, on the S by part of Georgia, and on the N by Circassia.

MINIATO, ST. an episcopal town of Tuscany, seated on the Arno, 20 miles SW of Florence. E lon. 10 45, N lat. 43 40.

MINO, a river of Spain, which has its source in Galicia, near Castro del Bay. It divides Galicia from Portugal, and falls into the Atlantic Ocean, at Carminha.

MINORBINO, a small town of Naples in Italy, in Terra di Bari, with a bishop's see, 36 miles N of Cirenna. E lon. 16 10, N lat. 41 8.

MINORCA, an island in the Mediterranean, lying 50 miles to the NE of Majorca. It is 30 miles in length, and 12 in breadth. Minorca was taken from the Spaniards by the English in 1790. E lon. 3 48, N lat. 39 50.

MINORI, a town of Naples, in Principato Citeriore, seated on the gulf of Salerno, between the town of that name and Amalfi.

MINSKI, a town of Lithuania, capital of a palatinate of the same name. E lon. 26 48, N lat. 54 11.

MINSINGEN, a town of Suabia, in the duchy of Wirtemberg. E lon. 9 7, N lat. 48 33.

MIOLANS, a fortress of France, in the department of the Lower Alps, seated on a craggy rock, in the valley of Barcelonnette. E lon. 6 50, N lat. 45 35.

MIOS, a lake of Norway, in the province of Hedemarle, 80 miles in circumference. It contains one island about 10 miles in circumference, fertile in corn, pasture, and wood.

MIQUELON, a small desert island, SW of Cape May, in Newfoundland, ceded to the French by the peace of 1763, for drying and curing their fish. It was taken by the English in 1793. W lon. 56 10, N lat. 46 48.

MIRANDA-DE-DOURO, a fortified town of Portugal, capital of the province of Trás-os-Montes, with a bishop's see. It is 306 miles N by E of Lisbon.

MIRANDA-DE-EBRO, a town of Spain, in Old Castile, situated on the river Ebro. It is 34 miles S of Bilbao, and 150 N of Madrid. W lon. 3 10, N lat. 43 49.

MIRANDE, a town of France, in the department of Gers, seated on a mountain, near the river Baïse. It is 340 miles SW of Paris. E lon. 0 20, N lat. 43 30.

MIRANDOLA, a town of Italy, capital of a duchy of the same name. It is a well fortified place, 30 miles NE of Modena. E lon. 11 19, N lat. 44 59.

MIREBEAU, a town of France, in the department of Vienna. It is 10 miles N of Patisers, and 178 SW of Paris.

MIRECOURT, a town of France, in the department of the Vosges. It is seated on the river Moson, 30 miles S E of Toul. E lon. 6 4, N lat. 48 18.

MIREMONT, a town of France, in the department of Dordogne. It is seated near the river Visere, 15 miles E of Bergerac.

MIREPOIX, a town of France, in the department of the Upper Pyrenees. It is seated on the Gers, 16 miles N of Foix.

MISENO, a cape of Italy, in the Terra di Lavoro, between Pozzoli and Cuma. On it are the ruins of the ancient Misenum.

MISITRA, a very ancient and celebrated town of Greece, capital of the Morea. It was taken by the Venetians in 1687; but the Turks retook it. It is seated on the Vasilipotamo, 100 miles SW of Athens. E lon. 23 30, N lat. 37 0.

MISNIA. See MEISSEN.

MISSISSCOUL, a river of the United States. It rises in the upper part of the state of Vermont, and running NE, enters Canada, and proceeds W some distance, it then re-enters the state and flows nearly in a western course to the Michigam or Mississcou bay, a branch of lake Champlain.

MISSISSIPPI, a large river of N America, which rises from several small lakes; in N lat. 47 48 40, W lon. 98 5. Its course to the river de Corbeau, is nearly S. It then turns eastwardly, which course it pursues to the falls of St. Anthony in lat. 44. The principal pitch of these falls, is about 10 feet perpendicular, the sheet is broken by one large island on the E, and a small one on the W. Here is a portage of 230 poles, and a descent in that distance of 24 feet. It continues the same course for some miles below lake Pepin, and then winding southerly, it runs generally in that direction to the Missouri, which it joins in lat. 38 55 10, W lon. 89 27 45. From thence to the Ohio, its course is SE. 193 miles. Here it pursues nearly a SW course to Red river, a distance of 1068 miles, and about SE. 327 miles, and empties in lat. 39 4, W lon. 89 21. The whole length of this river is about 2700 miles. Its banks exhibit a great variety of productions, and diversity of soil and appearance. In some places the land is level and well timbered, in others, extensive prairies, or natural meadows, extend for miles. At several points the banks approach the river, in the form of high bluffs and rocky precipices; and in other parts the waters inundate the adjacent shores for a considerable distance, in the spring and fall. Stags can ascend the Mississippi to New Orleans, and Natchez, and large batteaux to the falls of St. Anthony, but the navigation is frequently attended with considerable difficulty, on account of the rapidity of its current, the crookedness of the channel and the trunks of large trees, denominated sawyers, which become firmly fixed in the bottom of the river, and often prove destructive to boats. At the junction of the St. Petas, 11 miles below the falls of St. Anthony, it is 130 yards wide. At the confluence of the Osage in lat. 43 28 8, it is half a mile, and continues to increase in width, until at N. Orleans, it is about one mile and a quarter.

MISSOURI, one of the largest rivers in North America, which rises in the Rocky mountains. In N lat. 45 24 8 S, it forks into three branches, and here properly receives its name. The first is called Gallatin's river, which is the most rapid of the three, but not quite as deep as the others, yet navigable for a considerable distance, and is 70 yards wide at its mouth. The other two branches are half a mile further, each 60 yards wide at their confluence. The first, or middle branch of the three, is denominated Madison's river. The third or NW branch, called Jefferson's river, is considered the main stream, but is not so rapid as the last. From its source in the mountains it pursues an easterly course for the first 90 miles, to Three-thousand-mile island, so called from its being that distance from the Mississippi. Its extreme navigable point is some miles further in lat. 43 30 43, where it divides into two small streams. From this fork it winds in a NE direction, and receives on the SE side Philanthropy river, 30 yards wide; in lat. 45 2 43 S it receives Wisdom river from the NW, a bold, rapid, clear stream 50 yards wide but not navigable. At the head of Wisdom river is a remarkable spring, slightly impregnated with sulphur, and so hot that it boils meat sufficiently in 25 minutes. Within 14 miles of the Madison it receives Philosophy river from the SW, which discharges itself by several mouths. From Gallatin's river, the Missouri, after running for some miles nearly N, winds away to the W and receives from the NW in lat. 45 10 39 J, Prior's creek; twenty-seven miles further it breaks through the Rocky mountains, and affords a sublime spectacle. For nearly six miles the rocks rise almost 1200 feet perpendicular from the water. Nothing can be imagined more tremendous than the frowning darkness of these rocks, which project over the river and menace the traveller with destruction; at its outlet where the river escapes from this passage, there are vast columns of rock, apparently torn from the mountain, and strewn on both sides of the river, the trophies as it were of its victory. This extraordinary range is called the gates of the Rocky mountains. About thirty miles from the termination of this passage, Dearborne's river falls in from the NW, a handsome, bold and clear stream, 80 yards wide. The rapids of the Missouri are a few miles from this river, in lat. 45 48 14 7, they are several miles long but passable in canoes; here the river is closely hemmed in on both sides by hills, and foams for half a mile over rocks that obstruct its channel, the cliffs are about 800 feet above the water. About 50 miles from the rapids, the Missouri turns suddenly to the SE, and soon after receives Smith's river, a beautiful stream 80 yards wide, which winds

At the head of Wisdom river is a remarkable spring, slightly impregnated with sulphur, and so hot that it boils meat sufficiently in 25 minutes. Within 14 miles of the Madison it receives Philosophy river from the SW, which discharges itself by several mouths. From Gallatin's river, the Missouri, after running for some miles nearly N, winds away to the W and receives from the NW in lat. 46 10 39 0, Prior's creek; twenty-seven miles further it breaks through the Rocky mountains, and affords a sublime spectacle. For nearly six miles the rocks rise almost 1200 feet perpendicular from the water. Nothing can be imagined more tremendous than the frowning darkness of these rocks, which project over the river and menace the traveller with destruction; at its outlet where the river escapes from this passage, there are vast columns of rock, apparently torn from the mountain, and strewed on both sides of the river, the trophies as it were of its victory. This extraordinary range is called the gates of the Rocky-mountains. About thirty miles from the termination of this passage, Dearborne's river falls in from the NW, a handsome, bold and clear stream, 80 yards wide. The rapids of the Missouri are a few miles from this river, in lat. 46 48 14 7, they are several miles long but passable in canoes; here the river is closely hemmed in on both sides by hills, and foams for half a mile over rocks that obstruct its channel, the cliffs are about 800 feet above the water. About 80 miles from the rapids, the Missouri turns suddenly to the SE, and soon after receives Smith's river, a beautiful stream 80 yards wide, which winds through a charming valley. The Missouri soon changes north-westerly, and pursues that course as far as Medicine river, which falls in from the NW, and is 137 yards wide; 324 poles from the confluence of this river, is a small rapid on the N side, from which the Missouri gradually widens to 1400 yards, and at the distance of 448 poles reaches the head of the rapids, or commencement of the great falls, narrowing as it approaches. Here the hills on the N closely border the river, which makes its way over the rocks for the space of 380 poles, with a descent of 50 feet; in this course the current is contracted to 580 yards, and after falling over a pitch of 5 feet, forms a beautiful catenact of 80 feet, 5 inches; this does not, however, fall perpendicular, being stopped by a part of the rock which projects at about one third of the distance. After passing an island, the river goes on over rapids and little falls, at an estimated descent of thirteen and a half feet, till it is joined by a large fountain boiling up under the rocks near the edge of the river, into which it falls with a contact of 2 feet; its water is perfectly clear, and of a bluish cast, which it preserves after mingling with the main river, for half a mile. From this fountain the river descends with increasing rapidity, until it is narrowed to 473 yards, and here forms a grand catenact of 47 feet, 8 inches, by falling over a plane rock the whole width of the river. This is one of the most beautiful objects in nature, the edge of the rock being straight and regular as if formed by art. The water precipitates itself in an even uninterrupted sheet, and dashing against the rocky bottom, it leaves behind a spray of purest foam across the river. The Missouri after recovering itself, and pursuing a distance of 102 poles, with a descent of 3 feet, is precipitated down the crooked falls, 19 feet perpendicular; after passing a fall of 5 feet, the descent for 970 poles is more gradual, not being more than 10 feet; and then succeeds a handsome level plain for the space of 170 poles, with a descent of 3 feet. Thence it descends in 480 poles, about eighteen and a half feet, when it makes a perpendicular fall of two feet, which is sixty poles from the great catenact; in approaching which its descent is thirteen feet in 300 yards, and gathering strength from its confined channel, which is only 380 yards wide, rushes over the falls to the depth of 87 feet. It here loses itself in perfectly white foam, which forms a most splendid prospect. This spray is dissipated into a thousand shapes, sometimes flying up into columns of 15 or 20 feet, these are again succeeded by larger masses of the white foam, on all of which the sun impresses the brightest colours of the rainbow. The whole distance of these falls, from the commencement of the first rapid, a little below Medicine river, is 10 miles. A little distance below the great catenact, is a sulphuric spring which falls over the rocks on the N side, opposite the mouth of Prior's creek. The Missouri now pursues a NE course of 54 miles to Maria's river, in lat. 47 25 17 3. This stream falls in from the N, is 180 yards wide, and possesses a gentle current. A few miles further it receives the Tamey from the west. From this river the Missouri runs an easterly course of 382 miles, and receives Bratton river from the NW 100 yards wide; and Judith's river from the SW, four miles beyond which, ascending the river, is Ash rapids, passable in canoes; also Muscle-Shoal river, from the SW, in lat. 47 0 24 6, at the distance of 3276 miles from the Mississippi. About 40 miles from the Tamey commence those extraordinary walls, which rise on both banks of the river, almost perpendicular from the water's edge. They exhibit a very romantic appearance, and are about 300 feet high and 12 thick. Turning NE for 200 miles, the Missouri is joined by the Yellowstone river, and receives Milk river, so called from the peculiar whiteness of its water; it enters on the NE side by a channel 180 yards wide, at the distance of 2090 miles from the Mississippi; likewise Forepine river, a beautiful stream 40 yards wide at its junction, but increases to about 90 yards from its entrance. A quarter of a mile from this river is Two-thousand-mile creek, so named, from its being that distance from the mouth of the Missouri. At the confluence of the Yellowstone and the Missouri, the latter is 580 yards wide, and the channel deep; the former 666 including a sand-bar, its depth 15 feet.

The Missouri now winds away in a course S of E for 380 miles, to fort Mandan; and receives on the NE side White-earth river, so called from the quantity of salt found on its banks, the ground in many places appearing perfectly white. It is 60 yards wide, and navigable; its course is nearly due N through a beautiful and fertile valley. On the SW side, 1840 miles from its mouth, is the Little Missouri, 134 yards wide; it rises in the Black mountains across the northern extreme of which it finds a narrow and rapid passage. It then seeks the Missouri in a north eastern direction, and passes in its course near the NW end of Turtle mountain, which is but a few miles from its mouth. From fort Mandan the Missouri runs nearly a S course to White river; and receives on the W side, in lat. 46 50, Cannonball river, 140 yards wide; and again in lat. 56 39 5, Wer-tahos, 130 yards wide; the Swawkama, 90 yards; the Cayenne, 400 yards, but difficult to navigate; here are rich, thinly timbered, low lands. About 14 miles above this last river is an isthmus formed by the winding of the Missouri, called Look-out-bend, in lat. 44 19 36. On the same side is the Teton, 70 yards wide; and White river, 300 yards wide; this river is obstructed by sand bars. At its confluence with the Missouri is an excellent position for a town, the lands are well timbered, and the distance from the Mississippi 1130 miles. On the E side, 13 miles SE of Cannonball river, is Warreconne river, or Elk-shed-their-horn, 35 yards wide, it falls in at the upper end of an island one mile and a half long. In the last described course, of the Missouri, is the Great bend, in lat. 43 45, and 1200 miles from its mouth. The gorge, or distance of the two points of the river from each other, is about one mile and a quarter, but the circuit of the bend is 30 miles. At the lower point of the Great bend is an island, 1173 miles from the Mississippi. From White river the course of the Missouri is generally SE to its mouth. On the SW side its tributaries are Quicoure, 163 yards wide, but of difficult navigation; Platte, or Shoal river, 600 yards wide, and the same number of miles from the Mississippi. It is more rapid than the Missouri, but not navigable; Bigmehaw, 80 yards wide and navigable, its junction is in lat. 39 55 46, and 480 miles from the mouth of the Missouri; the Kansas, which rises in the plains between the head waters of the Arkansas and Laramie, pursues a course generally east to its junction with the Missouri, at the distance of 340 miles from the Mississippi, and in lat. 38 31 13; here it is 340 yards wide and the Missouri 600; the confluence of the Osage is in lat. 38 31 16, its course is NE, distant from the Mississippi 133 miles, its width 387 yards, and the Missouri 573. On the NE side are James river, 60 yards wide, and 950 miles from the Mississippi; 67 miles from this stream is the Big Sioux, 110 yards wide, and navigable upwards of 200 miles, to its falls; at the distance of 613 miles from the latter is Grand river, 80 yards wide; 34 miles further the two Charatons enter the Missouri together, one is 30 and the other 73 yards wide; the Little Sioux, 60 yards wide; its junction is in lat. 41 43 34; within 9 miles of the river Des Moines in its course it passes through a lake nearly 60 miles in circumference. Besides the tributaries that have been mentioned, the Missouri receives many others of various sizes, some of them capable of navigation for a considerable distance. In lat. 43 1 3 8 is another bend of the river to the NE; the gorge of which is 974 yards, but the distance round about 19 miles. At the distance of 880 miles from the mouth of the Missouri, on the S side, commence the copperas, cobalt, pirifera, and allum bluffs; 80 miles further is Calmut bluff. Still proceeding up the river 10 miles from the last, is an ancient fortification, of singular appearance, opposite to the upper end of Boulhorn island, which is large and well timbered. The bed of the Missouri is chiefly composed of a blue mud, from which the water derives a deep tinge; there is not much variation in its appearance, till it arrives at the mouth of the Platte. That large river throws out vast quantities of coarse sand, which contributes to give a new face to the Missouri. The sand as it is drifted down, adheres in time to some projecting point, the mud at length rises to the same height with the sand-bar; on this, as soon as it has acquired consistency, the willow grows the first year, its roots giving greater in at wide and navigable, its junction is in lat. 30 55 56, and 460 miles from the mouth of the Missouri; the Kansas, which rises in the plains between the head waters of the Arkansas and L. plate, pursues a course generally east to its junction with the Missouri, at the distance of 340 miles from the Mississippi, and in lat. 38 31 13: here it is 340 yards wide and the Missouri 500; the confluence of the Osage is in lat. 38 31 16, its course is NE, distant from the Missouri 133 miles, its width 387 yards, and the Missouri 574. On the NE side are James river, 90 yards wide, and 950 miles from the Missouri; 97 miles from this stream is the Big Sioux, 110 yards wide, and navigable upwards of 200 miles, to its falls; at the distance of 613 miles from the latter is Grand river, 80 yards wide; 34 miles further the two Charatons enter the Missouri together, one is 30 and the other 73 yards wide; the Little Sioux, 80 yards wide; its junction is in lat. 41 43 34; within 9 miles of the river Des Moines in its course it passes through a lake nearly 50 miles in circumference. Besides the tributaries that have been mentioned, the Missouri receives many others of various sizes, some of them capable of navigation for a considerable distance. In lat. 43 1 5 8 is another bend of the river to the NE; the gorge of which is 974 yards, but the distance round about 19 miles. At the distance of 880 miles from the mouth of the Missouri, on the S side, commence the copperas, cobalt, pirifera, and allum bluffs; 80 miles further is Calmit bluff. Still proceeding up the river 10 miles from the last, is an ancient fortification, of singular appearance, opposite to the upper end of Boulhorn island, which is large and well timbered. The bed of the Missouri is chiefly composed of a blue mud, from which the water derives a deep tinge; there is not much variation in its appearance, till it arrives at the mouth of the Platte. That large river throws out vast quantities of coarse sand, which contributes to give a hue to the Missouri. The sand as it is drifted down, adheres in time to some projecting point, the mud at length rises to the same height with the sand-bar; on this, as soon as it has acquired consistency, the willow grows the first year, its roots giving greater solidity; the cotton-wood tree next appears, and the river thus stopped in its course, indemnifies itself for the usurpation by encroaching on the adjacent shore. In this way successive changes are constantly going on. A ridge of highlands borders the river, through nearly its whole course, leaving between them fine rich meadows; the soil on these hills is generally good, and the country beyond them extends into high open plains, which are on both sides sufficiently fertile; but the S has the advantage of better streams of water. The lands between the rivers Osage and Platte are considered among the best districts on the Missouri, but are not well timbered; and beyond the Platte, although the soil is good yet there is almost a total absence of timber, and likewise a want of good water. The whole length of the Missouri is 3955 miles.

NEW YORK, one of the U. States of America, situated between N lat. 39 46, and the parallel of 46, and between W lon. 73 13 47, and 79 46 47. Greatest length from N to S 304 miles; greatest breadth from E to W 216,

It is bounded N by Lower Canada, or the parallel of 46 deg.; E by Vermont, Massachusetts, and Connecticut; SE by Long Island Sound; S by Pennsylvania; SW by Delaware river, and New Jersey; NW and W by the British possessions, the dividing line being the canal of the St. Lawrence, lake Ontario, Niagara river, and part of lake Erie. The state is divided into 48 counties, and these subdivided into 483 townships. The face of the country below the Mohawk, and E of the Hudson, is hilly and mountainous. It also becomes mountainous, in the NE part of the state, forming the high lands that divide the waters of the Hudson, and the St. Lawrence. The western parts are more level. Its principal rivers are the Hudson, Mohawk, Oswego, Genesee, Black river, and Saranack, &c. the Susquehanna, Delaware, and Alleghany, also rise in this state. It contains a number of lakes, of which Oneida, Seneca, Cayuga, Seneca, Canandaigua, and Chautauque, are the principal. The climate is various and subject to considerable modifications, arising from the hilly, mountainous, or level state of the different districts. Agriculture in many parts of New York, is in a flourishing and progressive state of improvement, the great fertility of the lands richly repaying the husbandmen for his labour. It has several fine islands, the principal of which are Nassau, or Long Island, Manhattan, or York Island, and Staten Island on the sea coast. In lake Ontario are Stony Creek, and Grand Isle, &c.; likewise Grand Island formed by Niagara river. This state stands at the head of the union, in point of wealth, commerce, and free white population. According to a census taken in 1814, the inhabitants amounted to 1,014,633, but in this enumeration there was no return from one county.

NEW YORK CITY, the capital of the county of the same name, in the state of New York, is situated on Manhattan island, at the junction of the Hudson and East rivers. Its position is extremely favourable for trade, which renders it the most commercial port in America. It is surrounded on every side except the N by water, and the largest ships can lie at any of the wharfs and unload their cargoes. New York was founded by the Dutch in 1614, and received its charter in 1686. The streets at the lower part of the city are irregular, and many of them crooked and narrow. But in laying out the northern part more taste has been exhibited, and elegance as well as convenience and utility have been consulted. Its public buildings are superior, in splendour and magnificence, to those of any city in the union. Among these the new city Hall, situated at the head of the park, is distinguished for its ornamental and durable architecture. It contains 38 houses for public worship, of three 8 are for episcopians, 8 for presbyterians, 4 Dutch reformed, 3 for friends, 3 methodists, 3 for friends, 3 baptists, 3 German Lutherans, 1 French protestant, 1 Moravian, 1 Roman catholic, 1 Jew synagogue, and 3 for Africans. Among these Trinity church, Grace church, St. Paul's, and St. John's, deserve particular notice for their superior beauty and elegance. The other public buildings are the hospital, situated on Broadway; the Custom house near the battery; the Alms house in Chamber street; the jail and Bridewell stand on the same lot with the city Hall; the theatre in Chatham street; and the state prison is on the bank of the Hudson, fronting on Greenwich street, about 3 miles N of the Battery. Here are 8 banking companies, 6 market houses, and a considerable number of humane and benevolent societies; a public library of about 10,000 volumes, a museum, and a medical society with an excellent botanical garden. Its public squares and walks are pleasing and elegant, particularly the battery, the park, and Hudson's square. The harbour is well defended by heavy batteries, erected in front of the city, on the adjacent islands, and the narrows. On Governor's island is situated fort Columbus, and castle Williams, the latter mounting 3 tier of guns, two of them bomb proof. This city contains 100,000 inhabitants, and is 91 miles NE of Philadelphia, 101 of Baltimore, 230 of Washington, 231 SW of Boston, and 774 NE of Charleston, S. Carolina. N lat. 40 43 43, E lon. from Washington 3 13, and W from Greenwich 73 00 43.

NEW YORK BAY, spreads to the southward of the city, and is about 9 miles long, and from one and a half to five and a half broad; having Long Island on the E. and Staten Island and New Jersey on the W. It receives the Hudson in the N; and the E river from Long Island sound in the NE. It communicates with the Atlantic ocean by the narrow, between Long Island and Staten Island. In this bay are situated: Governor's, Bedlow's, and Ellis's islands, all of which are fortresses, affording great advantage to the port of New York, by keeping it open when Philadelphia, Baltimore, &c. are obstructed by ice.

NEYTRACHT, a town of Upper Hungary, capital of a county of the same name, with a bishop's see. It is seated on the Weytra, 40 miles NE of Presburg. E lon. 17 49, N lat. 48 54.

NGAN-LO-POU, a rich and populous city of China, in the province of Hou-quing. It is 433 miles W by S of Nan-king.

NIAGARA, a river of N America, which forms the communication between lake Erie and lake Ontario, and runs from S to N 45 miles, and is from three quarters to one mile and a half in breadth. At the entrance of this river, on its eastern shore, is Fort Niagara; and 15 miles S of this, are those remarkable falls, which are reckoned among the greatest natural curiosities in the world. Above the falls, in the middle of the river, is an island 900 or 950 feet long; the lower end of which is just at the perpendicular edge of the fall. On both sides of this island, all the waters that come from the lakes of Canada, rush with astonishing grandeur, down a stupendous precipice of 150 feet perpendicular; and in a strong rapid that extends to the distance of 9 miles below, fall near as much more. Before the water comes to this island, it runs but slowly compared with its motion afterwards, when it grows the most rapid in the world. The noise of the Niagara Falls, in a clear day and fair wind, may be heard from S to 30 miles. When the water strikes the rocks, it rebounds to a great height, and causes a thick cloud of vapours, on which the sun, when it shines, paints the most beautiful rainbows. The mouth of the Niagara river, at the place where it empties into lake Ontario, is in N lat. 43 14, and W lon. 79 1. Another curiosity of this river is the "Devil's Hole," a tremendous chasm in the rocks, on the eastern side, four miles below the falls: it is nearly circular, and about 1500 feet in circumference.

NIAGARA, a post village and seat in Cambria township, Niagara county, N York, is situated on the E side of the above river, at its entrance into lake Ontario. The fortress was built by the French, in 1732; and passed into the hands of the British by the conquest of Canada. It was surrendered to the United States in 1796, but recaptured by the British, in December, 1813, and returned to the Americans at the conclusion of the late war. NIGER, a large river of Africa, formerly very little known. In order to ascertain the rise, course, and termination of the Niger, Mr. Park was sent out by the African association in 1795. The course of this river, which was formerly supposed to be from E to W, is now determined by Mr. Park, to be from W to E. In tracing the rise of the Niger, Mr. Park proceeded as far as Silla, the end of his journey eastward. So great is the rapidity with which the Niger traverses the empire of Cadum, that no vessel can ascend the stream; and in the rainy season, it swells above its banks, floods the adjacent lands, and often sweeps before it the cattle and the cottages of the inhabitants.

NIGRITIA. See NEGROLAND.

NIKOFING, a town of Sweden, in Bodernia, 60 miles SW of Stockholm. E lon. 15 46, N lat. 59 40.

NILE, a large and celebrated river of Africa, to which the southerly of Egypt owes its fertility; and the exploring of whose sources has, from the remotest ages, been accounted an impracticable undertaking. This discovery has, however, been made by Mr. Bruce. In the middle of a marsh, near the bottom of the mountains of Genna, arises a hillock of a circular form. The diameter of this, is something short of twelve feet; it is surrounded by a shallow trench, which collects the water, and voids it eastward; it is firmly built with ad or earthen turf, brought from the sides and constantly kept in repair, and this is the altar upon which all the religious ceremonies of the inhabitants are performed. It does not receive the name of the Nile till it emerges from the lake of Tzana or Deraba. Here its banks in the course of a few miles become very high, and covered with the most beautiful and variegated verdure that can be conceived. It is now confined by the mountains of Bejender until it reaches Akaba, where is the third cataract, which is represented by Mr. Bruce as the most magnificent sight he ever beheld. The river, though swelled by rains, preserved its natural clearness, and fell, as far as he could discern, into a deep pool, or basin, in the solid rock, and in twenty different eddies to the very foot of the precipices; producing a violent ebullition. About half a mile below the cataract, the Nile is confined between two rocks, where it runs into a narrow channel with impetuous velocity and great noise. Below this tremendous waterfall, the Nile takes a SE direction along the W side of Bejender and Ambara, on the right bank of the province of Genna. It receives a great number of streams from both sides, and after several turns, takes a last direction almost due N; and approaches within 63 miles of its source. It now seems to have forced its passage through a gap in some very high mountains, which bound the country of the Ganges, and falls down a cataract 200 feet high, and immediately below this are two others of very considerable height. The diameter of this, is something short of twelve feet; it is surrounded by a shallow trench, which collects the water, and voids it eastward; it is firmly built with sod or earthen turf, brought from the sides and constantly kept in repair, and this is the altar upon which all the religious ceremonies of the inhabitants are performed. It does not receive the name of the Nile till it emerges from the lake of Tsana or Denbena. Here its banks in the course of a few miles become very high, and covered with the most beautiful and variegated verdure that can be conceived. It is now confined by the mountains of Bejender till it reaches Akata, where it the third cataract, which is represented by Mr. Bruce as the most magnificent sight he ever beheld. About half a mile below the cataract, the Nile is confined between two rocks, where it runs into a narrow channel with impetuous velocity and great noise. Below this tremendous waterfall, the Nile takes a SE direction along the W side of Bejender and Anahara, on the right including the province of Goleja. It receives a great number of streams from both sides, and after several turns, takes a last direction almost due N; and approaches within 60 miles of its source. It now seems to have forced its passage through a gap in some very high mountains, which bound the country of the Ganges, and falls down a cataract 800 feet high, and immediately below this are two others of very considerable height. It now runs close by Souda, in a direction nearly N and S, and afterwards takes a sharp turn to the E. Leaving Souda, it passes by many large towns inhabited by Arabs, and turning to the N it joins the Tivania, and passes a large and populous town named Chendi. Having at length received the great river Atbara, it turns directly N for about two degrees; it then turns to W by S, for more than two degrees in longitude, and arrives at Korti. From Korti it runs almost SW till it passes Dongola, after which it comes to Maseho. From thence turning to the NE, it meets with a chain of mountains in about 22 1/2 of N lat. where is the seventh cataract named Jan Adel. This course is now continued till it falls into the Mediterranean, there being only one other cataract in the whole space. The Nile being covered with the rains, overflows regularly every year.

WIMBEGUM, a large and commercial city, capital of Dutch Guiderland, with a citadel, an ancient palace, and several forts. It is noted for the peace concluded here in 1695; and has been often taken and retaken, the last time by the French in 1784. Population in 1760, 15,722. It is seated on the W side, 80 miles SE of Unsocht, and 70 NE of Antwerp. E lon. 5 44, N lat. 51 28.

NING-FO-FOU, called by the Europeans LIAMPO, an excellent seaport of China, on the E coast, opposite Japan, in the province of Tcheking. This city has four others under its jurisdiction. It is 850 miles SE of Peking. E lon. 120 15, N lat. 30 57.

NINOVE, a town of Austrian Flavia, on the river Danube, 15 miles W of Brunsau. E lon. 4 3, N lat. 50 52.

NIO, an island of the Archipelago, to the S of Naxia, anciently called Ion. It is 35 miles in circumference, and fertile in corn. W lon. 25 25, N lat. 34 42.

NIORT, a town of France, in the department of the Two Seines. It is 1/2 miles NE of Rochelle. W lon. 6 35, N lat. 46 50.

NIPHON, the largest island of Japan, 600 miles long and 150 broad, containing 55 provinces. The chief town is Yedo. It is 134 miles E of China.

NISHEREL-NOVODOROD, an archiepiscopal town of Russia, in a government of the same name, seated on a mountain, at the confluence of the Volga and Gura, 200 miles E by N of Moscow. E lon. 45 30, N lat. 55 34.

NISIRIN, or NISIRIN, a very ancient and celebrated town of Diarbekir, now only the shadow of what it was, 70 miles SW of Diarbekir. E lon. 38 20, N lat. 36 10.

NISITA, a small island on the coast of Naples, very fertile.

NISMES, a flourishing city of France, in the department of Gard. Here are several monuments of antiquity. Nismes was taken by the English in 1417. The inhabitants were 8,000; but Lewis XIV. demolished their church, in 1661, and built a noble set house in its place. The population in 1807, amounted to 30,504. It is seated in a plain, 12 miles NW of Arles, and 78 NE of Marseilles. E lon. 4 25, N lat. 43 51.

The finest college in Paris is that of the Four Nations, called also Mazarin, from the name of the cardinal its founder. Among the public libraries, that lately called the King's, holds the first rank in respect both to the extent of the buildings, and the number of the volumes. It was founded by Charles V, in 1372. The Royal Observatory is built of free-stone, and neither iron nor wood has been employed in the erection. The Botanical Garden is worthy, in every respect, to its late appellation of Royal. The four principal palaces are the Louvre, the Tuilleries, the Palais Royal, and the Luxembourg. The garden of the Tuilleries, in front of the palace, and on the banks of the Seine, is unquestionably the finest public walk in Paris. The Palais Royal has been recently embellished with many beautiful buildings, and a garden, which renders it a pleasing walk. The palace of Luxembourg was built by Mary of Medicis, in 1714. Its gardens are open to the public on festival days. This city has been engaged and considerably improved since the revolution: here was deposited the collections of paintings, statues, and other objects of taste and curiosity, which were plundered from the conquered countries. The streets are generally without side walks for passengers; which with the narrowness of many of them, is a serious inconvenience. The number of houses is 32,000, and the population in 1807 was 547,766. Paris capitulated to the allied forces under the Emperors of Russia, Austria, and King of Prussia, on the 31st of March, 1814. the first is inhabited by Chinese; the second by Tartars. These two cities, without including the suburbs, are six full leagues in circumference. The height and enormous thickness of the walls of the Tartar city excite admiration. The streets are perfectly straight, most of them three miles in length, and 120 feet wide, with shops on both sides; but the houses are poorly built, and have only a ground-floor. All the great streets are guarded by soldiers, who patrol night and day with swords by their sides, and whips in their hands, to chastise those who make any disturbance, or take them into custody. The emperor's palace stands in the middle of the Tartar city. It presents a prodigious assemblage of vast buildings, extensive courts, and magnificent gardens, and is shut up on all sides by a double wall, the intervening space being occupied by houses belonging to the officers of the court, eunuchs, and by different tribunals. Merchandise and provisions are brought from other parts by canals cut from the rivers, and always crowded with vessels of different sizes. The inhabitants of Pekin are estimated at 2,000,000. This city is 500 miles N by W of Nan-king. E lon. 116 14, N lat. 39 54.

PELEW ISLANDS, THE, were, in all probability, first discovered by the Spaniards of the Philippines. There is every reason to suppose, that no European had ever been upon them, before the Amelope, a packet belonging to the East India company, and commanded by captain Henry Wilson, was wrecked there in the night between the 9th and 10th of August, 1783. They found the inhabitants simple in their manners, and mild in disposition. These islands are situated between 8 and 9 degrees of N lat. and 130 and 135 degrees of E lon. They are low, but narrow, well covered with wood, at least such of the islands as our people had an opportunity of seeing.

It is bounded on the N by Georgia, the Caspian Sea, and Usses Turky; on the W by Turkey and Arabia; on the E by the gulfs of Persia and Ormus, and the Arabian Sea; and on the S by Hindostan Proper. It is 1250 miles from E to W, and 900 from N to S. The chief rivers are the Tigris and Euphrates. In the N and E parts it is mountainous and cold; in the middle and SE parts sandy and desert; in the S and W, level and extremely fertile, though for several months very hot. South of Mount Taurus, the fertility of the country in corn, wine, fruits, and other luxuries of life, is equalled by few countries. The Persians equal, if not exceed all the manufactures in the world, in silk, woolen, mohair, carpets, and leather. Their works in these, join fancy, taste, and elegance, to richness, neatness, and show; and yet they are ignorant of painting, and their drawings are very rude. Their dying exceeds that of Europe. Their silver and gold lace, and threads, are admirable for price; but their lustrous. Their embroideries and horse furniture are not to be equalled; nor are they ignorant of the pottery and window-pane manufactures. During almost the whole of the last century, Persia has been dominated by conquitters for the sovereignty. On the assassination of the usurper, Nadir Shah, in 1747, Ahmed Abdulla, one of his generals, founded the kingdom of Candahar, to which he annexed the provinces of Korassan and Aseristan, in the E part of Persia, and those provinces of Hindostan Proper, W of the Indus, that had been ceded by the great mogul, in 1737, to Nadir Shah. Kerim Khan, another of Nadir's officers, obtained the sovereignty of all the southern provinces. He transferred the seat of government from Isfahan to Schiraz. He refused the title of Shah, or king, being satisfied with that of Protector of Persia. He was beloved by his subjects, and revered by foreign powers. On his death, in 1750, new competitors for the throne, sprung up, and have almost ever since continued to spread slaughter and desolation over this unhappy country. The Persians are generally Mahomedans, of the sect of Ali. Isfahan is the capital.

PETERSBURGH, or ST. PE- TERSBURGH, the metropolis of the empire of Russia, in a government of the same name. It is seated on the Neva, near the gulf of Finland, and is built partly on some islands in the mouth of the river, and partly upon the continent. At the beginning of the eighteenth century, the ground on which Peterburgh now stands, was only a vast morass, occupied by a few fishermen's huts. Peter the Great first began this city, by the erection of a clerk with 400 houses, in 1703, he built also a small fort for himself, and some wooden hovels. In 1710, count Golovkin built the first house of brick;

and the next year, the emperor, with his own hands, laid the foundation of a house of the same materials. From these small beginnings rose the imperial city of Peterburgh; and, in less than nine years after the Russian battle were erected, the seat of empire was transferred to it from Moscow. The streets, in general, are broad and petrified. The banks of the Neva are lined on each side with a continued range of handsome buildings. On the N side the fortress, the academy of arts, an observatory, and the academy of the most striking objects. On the S side are the imperial palace, the residence, and the mansions of many Russian nobles. In the front of these buildings, on the S side, is the quay, which extends three miles, except where it is interrupted by the Admiralty; and the Neva, during the whole of that space, has been embanked at the expense of the late empress, by a wall, parapet, and pavement of brown granite. Petersburgh was in 1782, inclosed within a rampart, the circumference of which is 14 miles. The inhabitants in 1801 were computed at 271,137. This city from its low and marshy situation, is subject to inundations. Among the most ornaments of Peterburgh is its equestrian statue of Peter the Great,
in bronze, of a colossal size; the pedestal of which is a huge rock, brought to the spot at an immense expense. It was erected with great solemnity by Catherine II, in 1782. Within the walls of the fortress is the cathedral of St. Peter and St. Paul, in which are deposited the remains of Peter the Great, and of all the successive em-perors. Peterburgh is 225 miles NW of biopot. It is 40 miles ESE of Smyrna. E lon. 28 14, N lat. 38 28.

PHILADELPHIA, a city and seaport of Pennsylvania, and the largest in the United States, is situated in a county of the same name, on a plain nearly level, between the rivers Delaware and Schuylkill. It is 6 miles above their confluence, and is built principally on the western bank of the Delaware. This city was first settled in 1682, by William Penn, from whom it received its charter in 1701. The plan, adopted by its benevolent founder, was that of a parallelogram, the streets crossing each other at right angles, and forming a public square in the centre. The public buildings of Philadelphia are numerous, and many of them display considerable elegance and beauty; among the most deserving of attention are the banks of Pennsylvania, of the U. States, and Philadelphia, the first is composed entirely of marble, and the last is executed in a peculiar style; the State house, in which Mr. Peale keeps his museum; the university of Pennsylvania; the baptist church; the theatre; the city hospital, and the Masonic hall, which exhibits a specimen of Gothic architecture. The other public buildings are the old court house, city prison, the old college, the alms house, and the buildings belonging to the library company, the philosophical society, and the academy of fine arts. The religious edifices are forty-four in number, of these 4 belong to Episcopalians, 5 to Presbyterians, 5 to Methodists, 3 Roman Catholics, 4 Baptist, 3 Friends or Quakers, 3 German Lutherans, 2 German Reformed, 3 Christian church, 2 African, and to each of the following denominations one viz. Free Quakers, Swedish Lutherans, Moravians, Anabaptists, Anabaptist Reformed, Covenanters, Unitarians, Unitarians, Independents, and Jews. A superb bridge has been built over the Schuylkill, and the city is supplied with water from the same stream. Two engine houses have been erected for this purpose, together with a basin on the margin of the river, from whence, by the aid of a short canal, pipes, reservoirs, &c. the water is distributed to every part of the town. Philadelphia is well provided with humane and literary institutions, both public and private, of the former the most distinguished are the American Philosophical Society, the University of Pennsylvania, the College of Physicians, which enjoys the highest reputation of any in America, the Philadelphia Library, containing since the annexation of the Loggians library, 24,000 volumes, the Academy of Fine Arts, Peale's Museum, which possesses the largest collection of natural curiosities in the union; the Hospital, and Dispensary, the Humane Society, and the Abolition Society. Among its manufactures are 10 oil mills, 18 distilleries, 10 potteries, 44 of copper, brass and tin, 7 paper mills, and 2 glass works, besides a variety of others. In this city are published 8 daily papers, 4 once a week, and 3 weekly papers, besides several periodical works. Here also is established the Mint of the United States, which has issued in gold, silver and copper coins, upwards of ten millions of dollars, since its first establishment in 1793. Philadelphia is governed by a mayor, recorder, 15 aldermen, and 32 common councilmen, the latter are divided into a first and second branch; the mayor is appointed for one year, by the common council, from among the body of aldermen. Population in 1810, 111,247. It is 120 miles from the ocean by the course of the river, 91 SW of New York, 100 NE of Baltimore, 130 of Washington, 323 SW of Boston, and 684 NE of Charleston S. 4465 inhabitants. In this way, it is converted into a navigable stream.

RHINE, a celebrated river of Germany, having its source in the country of the Grisons in Switzerland, and in the very heart of the Alps. It is formed of two streams, which unite at Reichenau. The Rhine then flows through the lake of Constance in Swabia; thence turning W. it passes by the city of Constance and Schaffhausen, and weaving its course from thence directly N. dividing Swabia from Alsace. Leaving Alsace and Swabia, the river gives name to the two German circles of the Upper and Lower Rhine, waters many considerable cities and towns, and receives the streams of the Moselle, Meuse, and Maas, in its course to the United Provinces. Below Krupp, in the duchy of Cleves, it divides into two streams. That which bends to the W. and flows by Nimwegen, is called the Waal, but loses this name on its junction with the Meuse, as named. Below Wyrcum, it divides into four principal branches, forming the lakes of Ysselmonde, Voorn, and Overflakke; the most northern branch is called the Merwe, and enters the German Ocean, below the Briel; the other two branches make their exit at Helvoetsluys and Gera. The only stream which had branches left to the NW below Emmerich, retains its name; but another name branches off to the N. takes the name of Yssel, and enters the Zuider Zee, below Camperduin. The old river proceeds W. by Rhine, to Wyck by Dusseldorf, where it again divides into two streams: that to the left is called the Leek, and enters the Merwe above Rotterdam. The branch to the right, which retains its name, but is now an insignificant stream, passes on the Utrecht, Woerden, and Leyden, and is literally choked up by mountains of sand, near the village of Catwyck.

RHINE, LOWER, a circle of Germany, which extends from the circle of Swabia, on the S. to that of Westphalia, on the N. It contains the electorates of Mainz, Treves, and Cologne, and the palatinate of the Rhine.

ROME, a very ancient city, formerly the mistress of the world, and seat of the Roman empire, the residence of the pope, head of the Roman church; none can compare with it in respect to the magnificence of its buildings and antiquities, the number of its monuments and curiosities, and the singularity of its historical events. It was founded, according to some, 753 years before the birth of Christ, by Romulus, the first king. The city is surrounded with a wall about 10 Italian miles in circuit; but not half of this space is occupied by houses, as many places where stately structures once stood, are now gardens, fields, meadows, and vineyards. According to an account taken by pope Clement XI. in 1714, the number of its inhabitants amounted to one hundred and forty-three thousand. How far short of what old Rome was in Trajan's time, when the walls of this city were 50 miles in circuit, and the number of its inhabitants of 8,000,000! The church of St. Peter, in the opinion of many, surpasses, in size and magnificence, the finest monuments of ancient architecture. Its length is 730 feet, the breadth 230, and the height, from the pavement, to the top of the cross, which crowns the cupola, 450. Adjoining to St. Peter's is the Vatican, or winter palace of the pope, with the richest library of the christian world. The Pantheon is the most perfect of the Roman temples which remain, and notwithstanding its depredations it has sustained from Goths, Vandals, and popes, is still a beautiful monument of Roman taste. The pavilion of the great altar, which stands under the cupola of St. Peter, and the four wreathed pillars of Corinthian brass which support it, were formed out of the spoils of the Pantheon, which, after 1600 years, has still a probability of outliving its proud capacious rival. As the Pantheon is the most entire, the Amphitheatre of Vespasian is the most stupendous monument of antiquity in Rome. About one half of the external circuit still remains. Agreeable to census taken in 1797, the population amounted to 138,568. The French, in 1798, plundered the city of its most valuable monuments of antiquity, its ancient statues and paintings, and levied heavy contributions on the inhabitants. However, in September 1799, the city was retaken by the allies. The French regained possession in 1800, which they retained until 1814, when it was restored to the dominion of the pope. In 1810 it contained 3183 inhabitants. This town is noted for its mineral springs, which have obtained great celebrity. They are numerous and known by a variety of local names. The Saratoga springs are situated on the W side of the valley, 13 miles W of the Padua, and 32 N of Albany. Within half a mile are 10 fountains, and near the center of these is Rock spring, deserving of particular notice. The fountain is enclosed in a natural half-law rock, of a conical form, about 6 feet diameter at the base, and rising to the height of 8 feet. At the top it has a circular opening nearly 10 inches in diameter, which enlarges downward. The water rises within a foot of the top, and is kept in a state of ebullition by the escape of carbonic acid gas in the form of air bubbles. Saratoga is rendered remarkable by splendid military events during the American revolution. It was here Burgoyne with his whole army surrendered, on the 17th of October 1777.

SCOTLAND, or North Britain, the northern of the two kingdoms into which the island of Great Britain was formerly divided. It is bounded on the W by the Atlantic Ocean, on the N by the North Sea, on the E by the German Ocean, on the SE by England, and on the S by the Irish Sea. To Scotland also appertain the Hebrides, or Western Islands, the Orkney, and Shetland Islands, and many others, amounting in all to 300. From N to S it extends 270 miles, and its greatest breadth is 120, but in some places not above 30. Its form is extremely irregular, being greatly broken and indented by arms of the sea, inasmuch that there is no place in Scotland above 50 miles distant from the shore. This country may be divided into three parts, viz. the North, the Middle, and the South divisions. The boundaries of these are strongly marked by the hand of nature. The first is cut off by a chain of lakes which cross the island in an oblique direction from NE to SW, stretching from Inverness to the Isle of Mull. The second, or middle division, is separated from the southern by the hollow tract between the Forth and the Clyde, through which the great canal is carried. The face of the country, in the

SCOTLAND, or North Britain, the northern of the two kingdoms into which the island of Great Britain was formerly divided. It is bounded on the W by the Atlantic Ocean, on the N by the North Sea, on the E by the German Ocean, on the SE by England, and on the S by the Irish Sea. To Scotland also appertain the Hebrides, or Western Islands, the Orkneys, and Shetland Islands, and many others, amounting in all to 300. From N to S it extends 370 miles, and its greatest breadth is 180, but in some places not above 30. Its form is extremely irregular, being greatly broken and indented by arms of the sea, insomuch that there is no place in Scotland above 50 miles distant from the shore. This country may be divided into three parts, viz. the North, the Middle, and the South divisions. The boundaries of these are strongly marked by the hand of nature. The first is cut off by a chain of lakes which cross the island in an oblique direction from NE to SW, stretching from Inverness to the Isle of Mull. The second, or middle division, is separated from the southern by the hollow tract between the Forth and the Clyde, through which the great canal is carried. The face of the country, in the northern division, exhibits, in general, little else than an assemblage of vast dreary mountains. On the northern and eastern shores of this division, however, there are many vales and level tracts of considerable fertility. The middle division contains many great ranges of mountains, which traverse this part of the island in various directions. The most southerly ridge, called the Grampian Hills, extends from Aberdeenshire in a SW direction, terminating in the great mountain Benlomond, in Stirlingshire. Its principal rivers are the Spey, Tweed, Clyde, Don, Forth, &c. The climate on the W coast is unfavourable to agricultural products, but in many places of the eastern coast, and the whole S division it is not inferior to the northern part of England. The rocky shores produce abundance of kelp, an article of considerable importance in several manufactures. The fisheries in the surrounding seas have long been esteemed an object of national importance. Scotland is divided into 33 counties, and contained in 1801, 1,564,022 inhabitants.

SPAIN, a considerable kingdom of Europe; bounded on the N by the bay of Biscay, on the NE by the Pyrenees, which separate it from France; on the E, SE, and S, by the Mediterranean; on the SW by the Atlantic; and on the W by Portugal and the Atlantic. It is 700 miles long, and 500 broad; and contains the provinces of Old and New Castile, Andalusia, Arragon, Extremadura, Galicia, Leon, Catalonia, Granada, Valencia, Biscay, the Asturias, Murcia, and Upper Navarre, some of which have been separate kingdoms. The air of Spain, during the months of June, July, and August, is excessively hot, but the rest of the year it is pleasant and temperate. Though there are some sandy barren deserts in the S, and many barren mountains in the N, yet in the greater part of the country, particularly in the valleys and plains, the soil is good, producing a great variety of rich wines, oil, and fruits. The chief mountains are the Pyrenees, which stretch from the Mediterranean to the Atlantic Ocean, for near 500 miles, their breadth in some places, being not less than 80. Its principal rivers are the Ebro, which is the only large river that falls into the Mediterranean, the Guadalquivir, the Guadiana, the Tago, or Tago, the Douro, or Duero, the Minho, and Tinto. The herb hali which is used in making salt, soap, and glass, grows in great plenty on the N. coast. The sea about Spain are well stored with fish; among which is the anchovy, in the Mediterranean. The chief manufactures of Spain, are those of silk, wool, iron, copper, and other hardwares; but these fall far short of the flourishing condition to which they might be brought; hence a great part of the treasures of America go to the foreign merchants who supply them with goods for that part of the world. Spain was conquered by the ancient Carthaginians, and afterwards by the Romans; it remained under the dominion of the latter from the year 197 B. C. to A. D. 411. It was overrun with the rest of the Roman provinces of Europe by the northern barbarians in 419; and was conquered by the Saracens in 713. These were finally expelled from Spain, by Ferdinand, who subdued Granada, the last of the Moorish kingdoms, in 1492. The power of Spain was at its zenith under the emperor Charles V., successor of Ferdinand. In the spring of 1808, it was invaded by Buonaparte, who contrived in a most perfidious manner to kidnap the Spanish royal family. A devastating war of 6 years ensued, which ended in the expulsion of the invaders, by the assistance of the English, from the kingdom. Population in 1800, was estimated at 10,394,000.

SUPERIOR LAKE, a lake of N

America, one half belonging to the United States, and one half to Great Britain, so called from being the largest on the continent. According to the French chart, it is 1800 miles in circumference. It contains many islands; two of them very large, especially Isle Royale, which is 100 miles long, and in many places, 40 broad. Upwards of 30 rivers enter it, some of which are of considerable size. It abounds with trout and salmon. Storms affect it as much as they do the Atlantic Ocean. It discharges its water from the SE corner, through the straits of St. Marie, into Lake Huron. Its N shore is a continued embankment of rocks, several hundred feet high, and indented with numerous bays and coves. The soil on the eastern shore is rocky and barren. The S side is a sandy beach, interspersed with rocky precipices of limestone. A remarkable point is observed on the S shore, called cape Shingomago, about 100 miles W of this cape a river falls into the lake, which is remarkable for the quantity of virgin copper found on and near its banks. On the eastern side are many small islands abounding in copper ore.

SUPINO, an ancient town of Naples, in Molise. It is seated at the source of the Tanaro, at the foot of the Appennines, 17 miles N by W of Benevento.

The most northern point of these streams is within 5 min. of the parallel of 43 deg. These numerous streams are collected by two principal branches; the Tioga, and the E branch or proper Susquehanna, which receives its name at the outlet of Ousego lake. It then runs a S and SW course to Pennsylvania, whence it turns W and re-enters New York, and pursues a N W course to Tioga county; here it again turns to the SW and passes into Pennsylvania, a few miles before it meets the Tioga, at the flourishing town of the same name. Thence the united stream flows SE, until it is joined by the Le'awannock; but it afterwards turns suddenly to the SW, running in the same direction to the town of Northumberland. Here it is greatly enlarged by what is called the West branch, and runs nearly due south, etc.

SUSQUEHANNA, a large river of the United States, which rises in the state of New York, in a great number of branches that spread from E to W, over a tract of country of about 160 miles. The most northern point of these streams is within 5 min. of the parallel of 43 deg. These numerous streams are collected by two principal branches; the Tioga, and the E branch which receives its name at the outlet of Onondago lake. It then runs a S and SW course to Pennsylvania, whence it turns W and re-enters New York; and pursues a N W course to Tioga county; here it again turns to the SW and passes into Pennsylvania, a few miles before it meets the Tioga, at the flourishing town of the same name. Thence the united stream flows SE, until it is joined by the Le'awannock; but it afterwards turns suddenly to the SW, running in the same direction to the town of Northumberland. Here it is greatly enlarged by what is called the West branch, and runs nearly due south, to all it is joined by the Juniata; another considerable tributary stream. From the Juniata to its entrance into the Chesapeake, the course is about SE. The Susquehanna is wide and deep at its mouth; but is navigable by sea vessels only about 3 miles upwards; owing to the numerous rocks and shallows, by which the channel is interrupted; though it is passed through by boats more than 300 miles.

SWARTSLUYD, a town and fortress of the United Provinces, in Overysse, seated on the Vecht, 4 miles from its mouth, and 5 NNW of Hisselt.

SWEDEN, a kingdom of Europe, bounded on the N by Danish Lapland, and the ocean, on the E by Russia, on the S by the Baltic and the gulf of Finland, and on the W by Norway, the Sound, and the Cattegat. It extends 800 miles from N to S, and 340 from E to W. The whole kingdom is divided into five general parts; namely, Sweden Proper, Gothland, Bleckland, Lapland, and Finland; and each of these is subdivided into several provinces.

The face of Sweden is in general similar to that of the neighbouring countries, only it is well watered by rivers, numerous lakes, and inland pieces of water. The same may be said with regard to its climate, soil, &c. Summer bursts from winter; and vegetation is more speedy than in southern climates. The soil is much the same with that of Denmark and some places of Norway, generally very bad, but in some valleys surprisingly fertile. The chief wealth of the country arises from her mines of silver, copper, lead, and iron. The last mentioned metal employs no fewer than 250 forges, hammering-mills, and smelting-houses. The population of Sweden in 1800, was 2,168,130. But as Finland has since been taken by Russia, it makes it only 2,047,001. The form of the Swedish government has frequently varied. In 1772, the states, who had obtained the whole power, since the death of Charles, and made a very indifferent use of it, were entirely subjected by a despotic measure of Gustavus, the last king, so that the government is now altogether despotic. He was assassinated in 1792, leaving his son Gustavus Adolphus a minor, who attained his majority in 1796.

SWEDENBORO, a post town in Gloucester county, New Jersey; situated on the S side of Raccoon creek, 2 miles N of Woodbury, 16 from Philadelphia, and 158 NE of Washington.

SWITZERLAND, or SWITZER, a country of Europe, bounded on the E by Tyrol, on the W by France, on the N by Russia, and on the S by Austria and Italy. It is 916 miles long, and 63 broad, separated from the adjacent countries by high mountains called the Alps. Though Switzerland lies between 45 and 48 deg. of N lat. yet being situated among the Alps, the highest mountains in Europe, & whose tops are covered with snow most part of the year, the air is much sharper than in more northerly latitudes. It is divided into 13 cantons, exclusive of their allies; namely, Lucern, Uri, Schwitz, Unterwalden, Zug, Friburg, and Soleure, which are Roman catholics. The protestant cantons are Zurich, Bern, Basle, and Schaffhausen. Glarus and Appenzel contain both religions. There are four passages over the Alps into Italy from Switzerland; the first of which is beyond the lake of Geneva over Mount Cenis, which leads to the city of Turin; the second begins in the country of the Grisons, and crosses Mount St. Bernard, leading to the valley of Aosta, which belongs to Piedmont; the third begins in the country of the Grisons, crosses Mount Simplenberg, and leads to the duchy of Milan; the fourth crosses Mount St. Gothard, and the bailiwicks of Italy, and terminates in the Milanese. The principal lakes are those of Constance, Geneva, Lucern, Zurich, and Neuchatel. The most considerable rivers are the Rhine, Rhone, Aar, Arve, Reuss, and Inn. The chief riches of Switzerland consist of excellent pastures, in which many cattle are bred and fattened, and the goats and chamois feed on the mountains and in the woods. The Swiss are a brave, honest, hospitable, hardy people; very true to their engagements, friendly, and humane. The population is estimated at 1,658,000.

TENNESSEE, one of the United States of America, situated between 35 and 39 deg. N lat. and between lon. 70 38 and 89 38 W. Breadth 104 miles, length 460. Bounded N by Kentucky and Virginia; E by North Carolina; S by Georgia and the Mississippi territory; and W by the Mississippi river; its figure is rhomboidal. This state is divided into 3 districts; Washington, Hamilton, Winchester, Merri, and Robertson; and these are again subdivided into 39 counties. The climate is agreeable and healthy, except in the neighbourhood of swamps or stagnant waters. The division into E and W Tennessee, was made in conformity to the natural division formed by the Cumberland mountains. In West Tennessee the face of the country is finely diversified exhibiting extensive level tracts. The other division is more mountainous; in both iron ore is found in abundance. The oil is excellent, producing all kinds of grain in abundance, likewise flax, hemp, and cotton. It is found to grow very luxuriantly, and for indigo; and vines grow luxuriantly. Salt springs are found in many parts. The principal rivers are the Tennessee, Cumberland, Holston, Clinch, Duck, and Wolf, Hiwassee, Portland, Obed, and Roanoke, which discharge themselves into the Mississippi. In 1810 this state contained 217,193 free persons, and 44,538 slaves.

TENNESSEE, a river of N America, formerly called the Cherokee River. It rises in the Iron mountains, and, having traversed the borders of the Cherokee country northward, is joined by the Holston branch, when it is called the Tennessee: thence it runs SW and N, into the state of Kentucky: here it soon turns to the NW, and then falls into the Ohio, 80 miles above the confluence of that river with the Mississippi. From its entrance into the Ohio, it is navigable for the largest row boats at all seasons, to the Mouth shoals, a distance of 320 miles; from thence to the Wheel or Suck, a distance equal to the former, the navigation is excellent. The Wheel, in about lat. 35 is considered a great curiosity. The river is here compressed into a narrow width, and the water is thrown by a rock projecting from the northern shore, with great rapidity to the opposite side, whence it rebounds and produces the Wheel.

air in general is healthy, but the soil in the E part is but indifferent, or want of water, toward the middle, the mountains and valleys abound in fruits; but the W part is the most fertile, being watered by rivers. In the woods and mountains are lions, wild beavers, otters, monkeys, camels, roebucks, hares, pheasants, partridges, and other sorts of birds and beasts. The most remarkable rivers are the Gualdarabia, Magrida, Magersia, and Caps. The government is aristocratic, that is, by a council whose president is the dey. The inhabitants carry on a great trade in linen and woollen cloth. They have also a trade in horses, olives, oil, soap, and curries eggs and feathers. The established religion is Mahometanism; and the inhabitants consist of Moors, Turks, Arabs, Jews, and Christian slaves.

TUNIS, a large and celebrated city of Barbary, capital of a kingdom of the same name. It is seated on the point of the gulf of Goletha, about 10 miles from the site of the famous city of Carthage. Population in 1800, about 300,000, of whom 10,000 were Jews, and 9000 Christians. A tragical revolution took place in this city, on the 19th of December, 1814. A cousin of the bey formed a conspiracy, and succeeded in exterminating the whole of the reigning family. During this bloody transaction the people and the troops, accustomed to each scene, quietly awaited the event, and returned to their ordinary occupations, after the massacre, as if nothing had happened. The harbour has a very narrow entrance, through a small channel, which is well fortified. The Mahometans here have nine colleges for students, besides a great number of smaller schools. TURIN, a flourishing city of Italy, the capital of Piedmont. It is seated on a vast plain, at the foot of the Alps, and at the confluence of the Doria and Po. Most of the streets are well built, uniform, straight, and terminate on some agreeable object: the Strada di Po, the finest and largest, leads to the royal palace, and is adorned with piazzas, filled with shops; as are various other streets; all of which are kept clean by means of a canal from the Doria, with sluices that flow through them into the Po. The inhabitants are computed to be 73,716. The houses are handsome, and all built of the same height. Near the city, on the banks of the Po, is the beautiful royal castle of Valentino, the garden of which is applied to botanical studies. The college of the academy is very large and well built, and has a great number of ancient inscriptions. In the royal library are 19,000 manuscripts, besides 30,000 printed books. The French besieged this city in 1706; but prince Eugene attacked them before the walls, and totally defeated their army. UNION VILLAGE. See GREENWICH.

UNION VILLE, a post village of Union county, S Carolina; situated on the ridge of land dividing the waters of Broad and Tiger rivers, the former affording a safe and convenient navigation to the ocean. It contains 150 inhabitants, and a small library. This village is 75 miles N of Columbia, 190 from Charleston, and 505 SW of Washington.

UNITED PROVINCES OF THE NETHERLANDS, a republic of Europe, consisting of seven provinces, which extend 150 miles from N to S, and 100 from E to W. They are bounded on the W and N by the German Ocean; on the S by Brabant and the principality of Liege, and on the E by Germany. They rank in the following order: Guelderland, Holland, Zealand, Utrecht, Friesland, Overijssel, and Groningen. Besides these provinces, are the lands of the Generality, including Dutch Brabant, Flanders, and Limburg in which are the towns of Bois-le-Duc, Breda, Bergen-op-Zoom, Maastricht, Venlo, Sluys, and Muidel. The seven United provinces being in great part surrounded by the sea, lying low, and abounding in marshes, have a damp and unwholesome air. Rains and fogs are frequent; and the gout, scurvy, rheumatism, and agues, very common and difficult of cure. The effects of human industry here are wonderful in the dikes and dams erected for defending the country against the inundations of the sea, and in the canals, mills, and sluices, for draining the marshes. The quantity of grain produced is not sufficient for home consumption. All the pit-coal and timber used in this country, and indeed most of the necessaries of life, are imported. All the provinces either lie upon, or communicate with the North Sea, by means of that called the Zuyder, or South Sea. The principal rivers are the Rhine, the Meuse, the Scheld, and the Vecht. There are many small rivers that join these, and a vast number of canals; yet there are few good harbours in the provinces. The best are those of Rotterdam, Helvoetsluis, and Flushing. All appetites and passions run lower and cooler here than in other countries, avarice excepted. Among their diversions, that of skating in winter is the chief. It is amazing to see the crowds in a hard frost upon the ice, and their dexterity in skating; both men and women darting along with inconceivable velocity. This country fell a prey to the French in 1794-5. It was erected into a kingdom and given to Louis Buonaparte in 1805, who was soon after deposed by his brother Napoleon, and Holland annexed to the French empire. In the spring of 1814 it was released from French domination, and erected into an independent kingdom.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, a republic of N America, bounded on the N and E by the British possessions; on the SE by the Atlantic ocean; on the S by E Florida, the Gulf of Mexico, and part of W Florida; on the W by the Spanish provinces, and unexplored regions. It lies between N lat. 25 and 49 37, and between W lon. 67 and 115. These states originally thirteen in number, long flourished as provinces of Great Britain; but parliament attempting to tax them by its sole authority, without the intervention of their assemblies, a civil war ensued, which ended in a complete renunciation of their connection with Britain. The articles of confederation and perpetual union, entered into in 1776, were found inadequate after the close of the revolution, to fulfil the purposes of government. To obviate the defects and difficulties arising from this imperfect system, a convention was called, and an entirely new form of government was adopted and ratified in 1787-8. Only eleven of the states, at first accorded to the new constitution, but were afterwards joined by the other two. This great American republic, contains upwards of 3,000,000 of inhabitants, and consists of 18 states in number, namely: Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Vermont, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Kentucky, Tennessee, Ohio, and Louisiana; also the territories of Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, and Mississippi, together with the districts of Columbia and Maine, and passions run lower and cooler here than in other countries, avarice excepted. Among their diversions, that of skating in winter is the chief. It is amazing to see the crowds in a hard frost upon the ice, and their dexterity in skating; both men and women darding along with inconceivable velocity. This country fell a prey to the French in 1794-5. It was erected into a kingdom and given to Lewis Buonaparte in 1809, who was soon after deposed by his brother Napoleon, and Holland annexed to the French empire. In the spring of 1814 it was released from French domination, and erected into an independent kingdom.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, a republic of N America, bounded on the N and E by the British possessions; on the SE by the Atlantic ocean; on the S by E Florida, the Gulf of Mexico, and part of W Florida; on the W by the Spanish provinces, and unexplored regions. It lies between N lat. 23 and 49 37, and between W lon. 67 and 115. These states originally thirteen in number, long flourished as provinces of Great Britain; but parliament attempting to tax them by its sole authority, without the intervention of their assemblies, a civil war ensued, which ended in a complete renunciation of their connection with Britain. The articles of confederation and perpetual union, entered into in 1776, were found inadequate, and the close of the revolution, to fulfil the purposes of government. To obviate the defects and difficulties arising from this imperfect system, a new form of government was adopted and ratified in 1787-8. Only eleven of the states, at first acceded to the new constitution, but were afterwards joined by the other two. This great American republic, contains upwards of 8,000,000 of inhabitants, and consists of 18 states in number, namely: Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Vermont, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Kentucky, Tennessee, Ohio, and Louisiana; also the territories of Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, and Mississippi, together with the districts of Columbia and Maine, the latter forming a part of Massachusetts. An immense acquisition of territory was added to the United States, in 1803, by the purchase of Louisiana. The principal rivers of the U. States, are, Connecticut, Hudson, Delaware, Susquehanna, Potomac, Savannah, Mobile, Mississippi, Ohio, and Missouri; the chief bays, are, Massachusetts, Delaware, and Chesapeake; the sounds are, those of Long Island, Pamlico, and Albemarle, the last is properly a bay; the lakes, are Michigan, and Champlain; the capes, Ann, Cod, May, Hatteras, and Fear; the mountains, are, the Appalachian, or Alleghany, which are divided into several ranges, with distinct names. Under the federal constitution the United States have flourished in a manner unexampled in the history of nations. Primary attention has long been paid to agriculture and commerce; the value of the imports and exports arising from the latter, amounted, in 1807, to more than 215,000,000 dollars. Arts and manufactures are also progressing, with a rapid degree of improvement. The citizens of the U. States are peculiarly distinguished for their civil and religious freedom. The firm foundation on which these great pillars of human happiness are established, leaves room to hope, that, in the new world, man is destined to arrive at the highest degree of perfection of which he is susceptible. Another characteristic of United Americans is the mildness of their penal code. Here, which marked the progress of the criminal laws of the old world, have been arrested. To an enlightened and practical humanity, this desirable result is to be attributed. Great enterprise is another predominant feature in the character of Americans. In all the pursuits of peace they have long been eminent, and in the late war with England, the citizens of the United States have shown themselves, equally capable of gathering laurels on the field of battle, or acquiring an imperishable fame by distinguished gallantry on the ocean.

UNNA, a town of Germany in the circle of Westphalia, in the county of Marck, formerly a considerable Hanseatic town. It is seated on a brook called Rotbeck, 10 miles NE of Dort-

VENEZUELA, a province of South America, declared independent, but still in a state of revolution. It is bounded on the N by the Caribbean sea; on the NE by the Atlantic; on the E by the river Essequibo, which divides it from English Guiana; on the S by the Orinoco; and on the SW and W by New Granada. The greater part of Venezuela is subject to the severe heat of a vertical sun. The coast, however, enjoys the cooling effects of a land and sea breeze. The face of the country near the sea is mountainous, the other parts are more or less level. The soil is rich, and the principal objects of cultivation are cocoa, indigo, cotton, sugar, and tobacco. The principal rivers are the Tocuyo, Arica, Yacayo, Trey, Guarapiche, Caura, &c. Its lakes are Maracaibo and Valencia. VENEZUELA, a gulf on the N coast of Terra Firma, which communicates with the lake of Maracaibo, by a narrow strait.

VENICE, a territory, and lately a republic of Italy, which comprehends 14 provinces, namely, the Dogado, the Feltro, the Vincentino, the Veronese, the Bresciano, the Bergamasco, the Cremasco, the Poiesino-di-Rovigo, the Mare-Trevigiana, the Feltrino, the Bellunese, the Cadorino, Friuli, and Istria; which see in their proper places. In the fourth century, when Attila, king of the Huns, called the Scourge of God, ravaged the N part of Italy, many of the inhabitants abandoned their country, and retired into the islands of the Adriatic Sea. As these islands are near each other, they found means to join them together by driving piles on the side of the canal, on which they built houses, and thus the superb city of Venice had its beginning. The number of people in the whole territories of the republic, is estimated at 2,400,000. Venice was once one of the most powerful commercial and maritime states in Europe. For this it was indebted, at first, to the monopoly of the commerce of India; the products of that country being conveyed, in the middle ages, up the Persian Gulf, the Euphrates, and Tigris, as far as Bagdad; thence by land, across the desert, to Palmyra; and thence to the Mediterranean ports; and afterward, the supplying of the crusaders with provisions and military stores was an additional source of wonderful opulence and power. The cause of the decline of Venice were the continual wars with the states of Italy, with the Hungarians, and their own rebellious subjects, which kept them employed so that they had no leisure to oppose the Turks, whose rapid advances ought to have alarmed all Europe. After the destruction of the eastern empire, the Turks came more immediately to interfere with the republic. Whatever valour might be shown by the Venetians, or whatever successes they might boast of, it is certain that the Turks ultimately prevailed; so that for some time it seemed scarce possible to resist them. What contributed also greatly to the decline of the republic, was a discovery of a passage by the Portuguese to the East Indies, round the Cape of Good Hope, in 1499.

VENICE, a city of Italy, one of the most celebrated in the world, and capital of a republic of the same name, with a patriarchate, and a university. It stands on 72 little islands in the gulf of Venice. The approach to the city is marked by rows of stakes on each side, which direct vessels of a certain burden, to avoid the shallows. These shallows are a better defence than the strongest fortifications. On the approach of an enemy's fleet, the Venetians have only to pull up the stakes, and the enemy can advance no further. Venice is situate about five miles from the mainland, in a kind of lagoon, lake, or smaller inner gulf, separated from the large one, called the gulf of Venice, by some islands, at a few miles distance. These islands, in a great measure, break the force of the Adriatic storms, before they reach the lagoon. The houses are built on piles. The streets, in general, are narrow; and so are the canals, except the Great Canal, which is very broad, and has a serpentine course through the middle of the city. There are above 500 bridges over these canals, the most famous of which is that called Rialto. It is built about the middle of the great canal, which divides Venice into two parts. It is of white marble, and has but one arch, in which its principal beauty consists; and is 90 feet from one extremity to the other. On this bridge are two rows of shops, which divide it into three streets; the largest of which is in the middle. The chief manufactures are cloth; especially scarlet, silk, gold and silver stuffs, brocades, velvets, and paper, wine, oil, fruit, sweetmeats, anchovies, and several sorts of drugs. Venice has neither walls, gates, nor citadel, to defend it; its situation supplying the want of all these. Besides what is properly called the city, there is a multitude of little islands lying round, which are covered with buildings, and make each of them a kind of separate town, the most considerable of which is that called Guidicea, or the "Jewel Quarter," which is large and populous; with St. Eremio, St. Helena, St. Giorgio, Chiosca, Il Lido de Palestrina, Il Lido de Malamocco, and Murano. In the island of Murano are made those beautiful looking-glasses, and other glass-works, for which Venice is so much noted: here the family of Cornaro has a palace, with a gallery of paintings, little short of an Italian mile in length. The salt-works in the island of Chiosca are of great benefit to the Venetians, and yield a very considerable revenue. The square of St. Mark is the greatest ornament of the city, and hath the form of a parallelogram. Opposite to the ducal palace is the public library of the commonwealth; containing a large collection of books and manuscripts, with some fine paintings, statues, and curiosities. One of the smallest pieces of money at Venice is called Gazetta: and the first newspapers published there, on a single leaf, having been sold for that piece, all kinds of newspapers were from thence styled Gazettes. Venice is included in the province called the Dogado, and is 72 miles E by N of Mantua, 114 NE of Florence, 140 of Milan, 312 N of Rome, and 500 N by W of Naples. E lon. 13 10, N lat. 45 50. VENICE, GULF OF, a sea between Italy, and part of Turkey in Europe. It is the ancient Adriaticum Mare, and is still sometimes called the Adriatic. VENLO, a strong town of Dutch Guelderland. It was more than once taken and retaken in the wars between the Dutch and Spaniards. In 1752, it surrendered to the allies, and was confirmed to the states general in 1716. It is seated on the E side of the Meuse, 19 miles N of Ruremonde. E lon. 6 50, N lat. 51 20. VENOSA, a town of Italy, in Naples, in Basilicata, with a bishop's see. It is seated at the foot of the Appennines, 72 miles NE of Naples. E lon. 15 53, N lat. 40 54. VERTA-DE-CRUZ, a town of S. America, in Terra Firma, seated on the river Chagre. Here the Spaniards used to embark the merchandise of Peru, on that river for Porto Bello. E lon. 79 0, N lat. 9 50. VERZONE, a town of Italy, in Friuli, 38 miles ENE of Belluno. E lon. 13 40, N lat. 10 33.

is that called Guida, or the "Jew's Quarter," which is large and populous; with St. Eremio, St. Helena, St. George, Chiosa, Il Lido de Palestrina, Il Lido de Malamocco, and Murano. In the island of Murano are made those beautiful looking-glasses, and other glass-works, for which Venice is so much noted: here the family of Cornaro has a palace, with a gallery of paintings, little short of an Italian mile in length. VESUVIUS, a celebrated volcano of Italy, six miles E of Naples. This mountain has two tops; one of which only goes by the name of Vesuvius, the other being now called Somma. The perpendicular height of Vesuvius is only 3700 feet, though the ascent from the foot to the top is three Italian miles. One side of the mountain is well cultivated and fertile; but the S and W sides are entirely covered with cinders and ashes, while a sulphurous smoke constantly issues from the top, sometimes attended with the most violent explosions of stone, the emission of great streams of lava, and all the other attendants of a most formidable volcano. The first of these eruptions recorded in history, took place in the year 79; at which time the two cities of Pompeii and Herculaneum were entirely buried under the stones and ashes thrown out. Incredible mischief was also done to the neighbouring country, and numbers of people lost their lives, among whom was Pliny the Elder. Since that time 30 different eruptions have been recorded, some of which have been extremely violent. In the year 1638, a mountain three miles in circumference, and a quarter of a mile in perpendicular height, was thrown up in the course of one night. There have been instances of ashes and sulphurous smoke being carried not only to Rome, but also beyond the Mediterranean into Africa, and even into Egypt; birds have been suffocated in the air, and have fallen down upon the ground; and it has perished in the neighbouring waters which were made hot, and infected by it. The operations of the subterraneous fire, appear to be very capricious and uncertain. One day there will be the appearance of a violent fermentation, and the next every thing will be calmed; but whenever there has been a considerable ejection of scorie and cinders, it has been a constant observation, that the lava soon made its appearance, either by boiling over the crater, or forcing its way thro' the crevices in the central part of the mountain. The top of the mountain fell in, in 1634, and the mouth of Vesuvius is now little short of two miles in circumference.

VEVAY, a thriving post town, and capital of Switzerland county, Indiana territory, is situated on the right bank of the Ohio, 8 miles above the mouth of Kentucky river, 40 miles SW of Cincinnati in Ohio, 50 NW of Lexington in Kentucky, and 570 W of Washington. HUDSON'S BAY, and LABRADOR.

WALLES, NEW SOUTH, the E coast of New Holland, extending from 43° 40' to 10° 37' S lat. being the N and S extremities of that vast island. This coast was first explored by captain Cook, in 1770; and a design was formed, in consequence of his recommendation, to settle a colony of convicts at Botany Bay. Captain Phillip being appointed governor of the intended settlement, as well as commodore on the voyage, sailed from Portsmouth, in May 1787, with a detachment of marines, and 779 convicts, of which 530 were women. He arrived at Botany Bay in January, 1788; but finding this bay very ineligible for a colony, he fixed upon Port Jackson, about three leagues and a half N of Cape Banks; and here a settlement was begun, to which he gave the name of Sydney Cove. The climate of this continent appears not to be disagreeable, notwithstanding the violent complaints which some have made about it. The heat has never been excessive in summer, nor is the cold intolerable in winter. There are many beautiful birds of various kinds; among which the principal are a black swan, its wings edged with white, its bill tinged with red; and the ostrich or cassowary. The quadrupeds are principally of the opossum kind, of which the most remarkable is the kangaroo. There is also a species of dog, very different from those known in Europe; they are extremely fierce.

WASHINGTON CITY, the metropolis of the United States. It is seated at the junction of the rivers Potomac and the Eastern Branch, extending about four miles up each, including a tract of territory scarcely to be exceeded in point of convenience, salubrity, and beauty, by any in the world. This territory, which is called Columbia, lies partly in the state of Virginia, and partly in that of Maryland, and was ceded by those two states to the United States of America, and by them established to be the seat of government, after the year 1800. The plan combines not only convenience, regularity, elegance of prospect, and a free circulation of air, but every thing grand and beautiful that can be introduced into a city. It is divided into squares, or grand divisions, by avenues running due N and S, intersected by others running due E and W, which form the ground work of the plan. The grand avenues, and such streets as lead immediately to public places, are from 130 to 160 feet wide; and may be conveniently divided into foot ways, a walk planted with trees on each side, and a paved way for carriages. The other streets are from 90 to 110 feet wide. The positions of the different public edifices, and for the several squares and areas, were determined on the most advantageous ground, susceptible of such improvements, as either use, or ornament may hereafter require. The site selected for the situation of the capital, is on an eminence commanding a view of every part of the city; the other public buildings consisted of the president's house, and those erected for the accommodation of the public offices. Here are likewise an Episcopal, Presbyterian, Roman Catholic, and Baptist church, a goal, and hotel. In 1810, Washington contained 8205 inhabitants, of whom 2304 were blacks. On the 24th of August, 1814, this city submitted to the British forces, under the command of Gen. Ross and Ad. Cockburn, after an ineffectual struggle. Some of its private buildings were subjected to pillage, and the public edifices to conflagration, not even sparing the national library; thus evincing a violation of the rules of civilized warfare, and exhibiting an outrage on learning and the arts, without a parallel, except in the barbarous progress that formerly marked the irruptions of the Vandals and Saracens. The edifices that were destroyed by those ruthless invaders are at present rebuilding. N lat. 38 53 28, W lon. of the general post-office from Greenwich 77 1.

YELLOW STONE, a large river of N America, which, according to Indian information, has its remote sources in the Rocky Mountains, on the confines of New Mexico. The place where it issues through the mountains is only 44 miles from the three forks of Jefferson river, and 18 from the Gallatin.

Here, although just leaving a high snowy mountain, it is a bold, rapid, deep stream, 130 yards wide. Nine miles from this, it receives Shickel's river from the NW, 39 yards wide, and 90 miles further is Rose river, so denominated from the number of roes on its banks; 30 miles from the last is Clark's Fork, a river from the S 150 yards wide; between 80 and 90 miles from this stream, is a very remarkable rock, called Pompey's pillar, situated about 250 paces from the river. It is 300 feet high, accessible only on the NE side, and nearly 400 paces in circumference. Several miles further the Yellow Stone receives the Big Horn river. The two streams at their confluence, arch nearly of the same breadth, a little more than 300 yards each. The Yellow Stone is the deeper of the two, being 10 feet, and the other from 5 to seven. The Big Horn rises in the Rocky mountains, near the Yellow Stone, and flows, unobstructed by falls, through a fine, rich, open country. One hundred and ninety miles further is the Lakota, or Tongue river, 180 yards wide, and the main stream 600. At the distance of 233 miles from the Lakota, the Yellow Stone joins the Missouri, and widens during this course to one mile. From the point, where it bursts through the Rocky mountains, to its confluence with the Missouri is 337 miles. It affords good batteau navigation, there being none of the moving sand bars which obstruct the channel of the Missouri, and its waters are less turbid, than those of the latter river. Its principal tributaries, also, may be ascended in boats.—From the mountain to Clark's Fork, the current of the Yellow Stone is four miles and an half per hour.—From thence to Big Stone, three and an half, and thence descending to its mouth, two miles.
